Four of Terry's Mound Stars Mowed Down in Hail of Hits.

Ott, Moore, Powell All Hit Home Runs

Losers Muff Chance in 7th With Winning Run on Base.

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

Polo Grounds, New York, Oct. 6. Proudly above the World Series battleground floats the American League banner tonight, hoisted there by the batting might of the Yankees, who took the Giants by storm today.

Into the defenders of National League supremacy the Yankees poured a relentless hail of hits, riddling the offerings of four Giant pitchers and putting a violent end to the 1936 World Series.

Before 38,427 non-combatants the trained Yankee sluggers transformed the decisive series contest into a rout, then into a needless slaughter with a seven-run charge in the ninth inning that placed the game beyond reclaim of the Giants' forces.

By the score of 13 to 5 the Yankees won the sixth and final series game to leave with National League adherents the awful truth of the preseries notices of their batting prowess.

Bad Strategy.

As late as the eighth inning, the Giants were still in the ball game. Joe Moore's long home run into the right-field bleachers with one out had reduced the Yankees' lead to 6-5. But Johnny Murphy, who had been rushed to the mound to relieve the faltering Lefty Gomez in the seventh inning, quelled the ambitious Giants, and then—

The Yankees unloosed their furious ninth-inning charge. Dick Coffman, ace relief pitcher of the Giants, was greeted by Joe DiMaggio and Lou Gehrig with a pair of line-drive singles. The slaughter had begun.

Manager Bill Terry, of the Giants, then attempted a bit of ill-starred strategy. Grabbing up a grounder off Bill Dickey's bat, he threw to third base in an attempt to catch DiMaggio off the bag, ignoring the fact that DiMaggio was already far on his way to the plate. Ahead of Third Baseman Koenig's throw to Catcher Danning, DiMaggio scored and Dickey, who was safe on first, romped to second when Danning dropped the ball.

The Big Blow-up.

The dangerous George Selkirk was then given an intentional pass that filled the bases, and Jake Powell took up the firing. Through the legs of Shortstop Dick Bartell he whistled a vicious single and Gehrig and Dickey danced across the plate.

In despair Terry removed Coffman, called for Harry Gumbert from the bullpen. Tony Lazzeri they passed purposely to pitch to Murphy in another bit of strategy that went awry, for Murphy lashed a single to right and Selkirk scored.

Pathetically Gumbert then lost control, walked Crosetti and forced Powell across the plate. Five runs the Yankees had for the inning's efforts and not a man yet was out. And the bases still were full.

Even as Rolfe hit into a force play at second for the first Yankee out, another run crossed the plate, and Joe DiMaggio then contributed the Yanks' fifth hit of the inning, their seventeenth of the game—a single out of Bartell's reach that scored Murphy from third with the seventh run of that uproarious ninth inning.

The Bigger Seventh.

Even as they had solved the mystery of Carl Hubbell the second time they were to face him in this World Series, the Yankees today turned on Fred Fitzsimmons, their tormentor of the third game

Swedish Flier Over Atlantic; Leaves Baroness in New York

Swedish flier and the girl he left behind, Kurt Bjorkvall, Swedish pilot, who took off from New York yesterday on a proposed flight to Stockholm, Sweden, shown with the Baroness Eva von Blixen-Finecke, who was scheduled to make the flight with him, but didn't. Bjorkvall on Flight to Stockholm; Will Wed 'Other Girl.'

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 6.—Kurt Bjorkvall, Swedish flier, was somewhere over the Atlantic tonight in a nonstop flight toward Stockholm while a blonde lion-hunting baroness was sitting in a New York club wondering why she couldn't have gone along, too.

In the flier's left breast pocket, it developed, was the photograph of an 18-year-old Swedish girl with an Anglicized name—Maud Dickson. He said he would "announce our engagement" when he reached Stockholm.

Baroness Eva von Blixen Finecke, garbed in flying clothes and carrying a quart of coffee, was left at the field when Bjorkvall roared away in his green and red monoplane.

Baroness Is Silent.

The baroness, who has motored alone in Africa and shot lions in its jungles, sat secluded in a club.

Rebels Open Madrid 'Push' In 2 Sectors

Barbed Wire Barricades Are Set Up as Capital Awaits Attack.

The Spanish Revolt.

Two rebel armies opened the long-expected "big push" on Madrid. Insurgent planes rained hundreds of bombs as separate columns drove toward the capital from north and south.

Loyalist defenders of Madrid prepared to fight the rebels in the streets. Volunteer workmen dug trenches across the city's thoroughfares and erected barbed-wire barricades.

Refugees reaching France from the Spanish capital revealed that bands of amateur "executioners" have killed secretly some 3,000 persons in Madrid.

'Big Push' Opened.

By the United Press.

Madrid, Oct. 6.—Two rebel armies battered at Madrid's defenders today in a double drive opening the "big push" on the capital.

Heavy clouds and the first autumnal rain hampered but did not stop rebel planes from loosing hundreds of bombs and then strafing loyalist lines with heavy machine gun fire. Artillery roared all day.

In the Santa Cruz sector, 34 miles southwest of Madrid, rebels prepared to advance along a 6-mile front, bombarding loyal artillery, advance lines and villages from a point 4 kilometers from Quismondo.

The bombardment started at 8 a. m., accompanied by flights of insurgent bombers. All day they flew over Santa Cruz bombing loyal batteries and fortifications.

Bitter Rebel Attack.

Thirty miles north, at Navalperal, northwest of Madrid, the Mangada loyalist column was bearing the brunt of a bitter rebel attack led by Moors. Artillery fire by both sides was terrific. Rebel infantry and cavalry made furious assaults on the government positions, but were repulsed with heavy losses.

The aerial bombardment of the Santa Cruz sector was continuous. At one time as many as eight bombers "quartered" the area. They flew only a few hundred feet high and after exhausting their bombs, came so low their machine guns and thick armor plate protecting the fliers could be seen from the ground.

Thus they strafed the loyalists with machine guns. When their ammunition was exhausted they returned to bases for fresh stocks and more bombs. Loyalist officers believe the rebels have established an airdrome close behind their lines as the bombers kept coming and going hour after hour, dropping as many as 60 bombs a trip.

At Navalperal the rebel artillery was aimed at the railway station and on the road to Las Navas, seeking to smash rail communications and a highway bridge, hoping thereby to prevent the arrival of loyalist reinforcements.

After unsuccessful infantry attacks, insurgent cavalry tried to round the loyalist left flank to attack from the rear. The loyalists held their fire until the rebels were almost upon them. The cavalry was forced back.

Loyalists defended their prepared positions instead of taking the offensive.

Munitions Are Added.

Rebels operating from Toledo were busy cleaning out remnants of loyalist bands in the surrounding countryside and in bringing up munitions and supplies for the advance toward Aranjuez and, ultimately, Madrid.

Meanwhile, President Manual Azana decreed immediate mobilization of all private soldiers of the 1934 class, soldiers and corporals of the 1935 class presently in Almeria and other provinces, and all officers and soldiers of the classes of 1932 and 1933 in Huesca Province.

Prepare for Attack.

Madrid, Oct. 6.—The government tonight prepared to fight insurgents in the streets of Madrid.

Volunteer workmen feverishly dug trenches across the city's thoroughfares and built pill boxes at street intersections.

Elliott Roosevelt Contracted $500,000 'Cut' on Airplane Sale to Soviet, Fokker Says

Deposition Given in '35 Just Made Public by Nye Committee.

President's Assent Reported Granted

Son Issues Full Denial, Offering Copy of Agreement to Senators.

In a deposition made public last night by the Senate Munitions Committee, dated September 18, 1935, Elliott Roosevelt, 25-year-old second son of the President, was stated to have signed a contract in 1934 with Anthony H. S. Fokker, former German plane manufacturer, for the sale of airplanes to Russia.

The deposition was made public by the Senate Munitions Committee, on the order of Chairman Senator Gerald P. Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, and following published charges that the committee was withholding information. It allegedly was signed by Fokker before a notary as a true statement of fact.

The President's son was to receive $500,000 as a commission, according to the affidavit, which said an initial cash payment of $5,000 was made.

Fokker said, according to the affidavit, that the price sought for the planes by Elliott Roosevelt and his associate was "so high that the Russians would have nothing to do with the whole business and had not bought any of the planes."

Nye on Way Back.

Senator Nye was en route back to Washington from New York last night. Committee officials said the deposition was taken by Stephen Raushenbush and Joel Earnest, committee investigators.

The affidavit quoted Fokker as saying he contracted with Elliott Roosevelt to sell the planes after learning he could not obtain an exclusive sales agency for Douglas airplanes in Russia "because it had been given to Mr. Elliott Roosevelt and certain partners in business with him."

The White House was silent last night on the munitions committee disclosures, but an attache observed that young Roosevelt "is a free agent."

Full Denial Issued.

Associated Press dispatches from Oklahoma City last night quoted Elliott Roosevelt as denying he ever made a contract with Fokker to sell military airplanes to Russia.

Young Roosevelt said he had contracted with Fokker in February, 1934, to sell airplanes, but that the planes were not military ships and that the contract expressly stipulated that Roosevelt was not to sell to foreign governments, nor to the United States Government, nor to officials of such governments.

The Associated Press said Elliott, in a long-distance telephone conversation with the Fort Worth (Texas) Star-Telegram, said his never-consummated contract with Fokker was an agreement whereby he would represent Fokker in sales of commercial transport planes to private foreign corporations.

"I have a copy of the contract," Roosevelt was quoted as saying. "All this is down in black and white and I shall be glad at any time to present it to the munitions committee along with a complete refutation of all the statements allegedly made by Mr. Fokker."

The affidavit quoted Carter Tiffany, Fokker agent, as saying he had been informed through a third party that President Roosevelt had approved of the contract made by Elliott, but had objected to his son's traveling abroad with the agent in an effort to sell the planes.

An associate of Fokker, the affi-

Dentist Held In Bomb Case Slashed in Cell

Found Injured on Wrist; Accused With Roomer in July 22 Death.

By the Associated Press.

Eastville, Va., Oct. 6.—County jail attendants called a physician early tonight to treat one of two men charged with perpetrating the bomb killing of Curry Thomas at Cape Charles, July 22, for a severe cut on the wrist and loss of blood.

Dr. H. Trower said he found Dr. H. R. Hege, 47-year-old Mount Airy, N. C., dentist, one of the two held for the Eastern Shore farmer's death, suffering from a half-inch cut on the left wirst near the radial artery.

County officers said Dr. Hege told them the cut was inflicted accidentally when he broke his watch crystal.

He is held with Ed Banner, 52-year-old Mount Airy WPA foreman, on a charge of mailing the "wedding present" bomb which killed Thomas and injured his bride of six weeks at their home near Cape Charles two and a half months ago.

They were charged with first-degree murder, said Postoffice Inspector R. B. Webb, one of the Federal operatives who worked on the case after the bomb wrecked Thomas' automobile before his St. Charles, Va., home that July evening.

Worked for Dentist.

The inspector did not trace the evidence which led to the arrests, but Postoffice investigators already had said that Mrs. Thomas, who was divorced from John Salmons, of Galax, Va., worked as a nurse in the dentist's office for three years before she went to Cape Charles, met Thomas and married him.

She still is in the hospital at Nassawaddox, Va., but is nearing recovery from the injuries received when the exploding package literally blew her husband's body to bits and wrecked the car in which the couple met.

Dr. Hege, who is married and who has practiced dentistry at Mount Airy for 20 years, made no resistance when officers rode alongside the car in which he and Banner were driving northward through Carroll County. Banner, who has boarded at Dr. Hege's Mount Airy home for a number of years, also went calmly with Sergt. J. C. Aaron and Officer T. W. Carter of the Virginia highway force.

Placed in Separate Cells.

They were placed in separate cells at the Eastville Jail, and Charles Lankford, jr., Northampton prosecutor, continued his work of gathering evidence and remained "out of town" during the day.

At Cape Charles, in Northampton County, it was said that the prosecutor intended to ask Circuit Judge John Nottingham to call a special grand jury to consider the cases. The next regular term of Northampton court opens November 9.

Webb, who worked with Postal Inspector J. E. Sentman to solve the bomb-slaying, did not reveal what was the basis on which Northampton officers founded their charges, but did say that no Federal charges had been placed as yet against Dr. Hege and Banner. The latter once ran a store at Mount Airy, Carroll officers said.

Well-to-Do Farmer.

The death-dealing, innocent-appearing mail bomb shattered the honeymoon of Thomas, a well-to-do farmer, and his June bride.

Together they had gone to postoffice at Capt. Charles and there received a parcel which bore the return address, "F. C. Thomas, Richmond, Va."

They carried it home, and, before leaving the car at the side of their farm home, began to open it.

A click "like the springing of a mouse trap" was followed by a shattering explosion which tore Thomas to bits and threw his wife from the side of the car. She was semi-conscious, for days.

Names Linked in Russian Plane Deal

DONALD DOUGLAS. ELLIOTT ROOSEVELT. ANTHONY FOKKER.

Text of Affidavit Released As Naming Elliott Roosevelt

Text of what the Senate Munitions Committee released last night as a deposition sworn by Anthony H. S. Fokker, airplane manfacturer, in which it was stated that Elliott Roosevelt, son of the President, was a principal in a contract covering sale of airplanes to Russia:

Anthony Fokker, of Alpine, N. J., was questioned concerning the activities in arranging for foreign sales of American planes in the presence of his American business representative, Mr. Carter Tiffany, of New York City, by Mr. Stephen Raushenbush and Mr. Joel Earnest, of the staff of the special Senate committee investigating the munitions industry, on Thursday, September 12, 1935, and made the following statements which he swears to be true:

Mr. Fokker entered the airplane business at an early age and by the time he was 22 was operating a plant in Germany; at the age of 28 he was operating a plant in Holland employing 1,200 men. The success of the German air forces during the World War was largely due to his invention of a device for firing machine guns efficiently and at long range through the propeller blades. This was later copied by the allies but until it was copied, the Germans had complete mastery of the air.

Mr. Fokker came to America and established a corporation known as the Fokker Aircraft Corporation, control of which was later taken over by General Motors and under the name of General Aviation and other names, was later managed by General Motors in a most inefficient and unsuccessful way.

Mr. Fokker, through his plant in Holland known as the N. V. Nederlandsche Vliegtuigenfabriek of Amsterdam, Holland, has engaged in the sale of licenses to countries throughout the world and airplanes of his own make and the make of others. He states that he has probably sold more airplanes than any other individual throughout Europe. He states that his reputation as an airplane man is sur-

Roosevelt Asks For Retention Of Gold Power

Extension of Emergency Right to Devalue Dollar His Purpose.

By Robert C. Albright.

President Roosevelt plainly intimated yesterday that he would seek extension of his emergency powers to further revalue the dollar, but with no intention to wield the authority unless the domestic economic situation was hurt by world developments.

The President said his primary purpose was maintenance of domestic values. To guard against possible destruction of these by unexpected action by some other nation or nations, he said he thought the Federal Government should retain emergency power to cope with the world monetary situation.

Both the President's power to change the gold content of the dollar, and authority to wield the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund to support the dollar in international exchange, expire on January 30.

Wider Powers Sought.

Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., previously had announced he would recommend to the President extension of Treasury powers to use the stabilization fund, which recently has been put to a Million-Dollar Eyeglass Fraud Exposed by U.S.

Ring of Fake Specialists Mulcting Aged of Savings Broken Up.

A $1,000,000 swindle—known as the "glimmer racket"—operated by a Nation-wide ring of fake eye specialists, was exposed yesterday by inspectors of the United States Postal Service.

Investigation was started when postal authorities learned that fakers, claiming to be specialists connected with well-known clinics and hospitals throughout the country, were performing fake operations in homes and selling cheap glasses, worth perhaps $3, for as much as $100.

A number of arrests have been made in various sections of the country. The pseudo specialists usually picked aged persons living in remote rural communities as their victims.

Deprived of Last Dollar.

According to investigators, the ease with which the racketeers extorted large sums from unsuspecting "patients" was surpassed only by the brutality of their scheme. Often, it was reported, the victims were left believing they had been saved from cancer of the eyes, blindness or paralysis—when, to the contrary, they had not been bene-

Hopkins Uses Own Figures on Kansas Idle Aid, Governor Says.

By the Associated Press.

Topeka, Kans., Oct. 6.—A demand that Works Progress Administration pay rolls be opened to newspaper inspection was linked by Gov. Alf M. Landon at a press conference today to an assertion that the New Deal was censoring news sources.

"Censorship of the source of news is just as bad as censorship of news," the Republican Presidential candidate said. "That is what we have now—censorship of the source of news."

The nominee was talking in a press conference, where he also reaffirmed his support of the St. Lawrence Seaway project. Landon was asked by reporters to comment on a statement by Harry L. Hopkins that WPA records were open "to anybody who has a legitimate reason to see them." The WPA administrator, in turn, was replying to a demand by John G. Stutz, Kansas relief director, for figures on State WPA administrative costs.

"Harry L. Hopkins has shut off the source of news," Landon said. "I think WPA records are public business and the information should be made available to any newspaper.

"I view newspaper publicity as a legitimate purpose. All public records, of any kind or description, should be open to the newspapers."

"Does that hold during election years?" he was asked.

"It doesn't make any difference

Ickes Charges Coughlin Link To Republicans

Says He Will Cite Proof in Columbus, O., Speech, First of Series of 5.

By Sidney Olson.

As the "shock troops" of the New Deal made ready yesterday to move into the field for a series of oratorical blasts that will end only with election day, Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, asserted yesterday his first speech will show "a connection between the Republican high command and Father Coughlin."

Ickes said he had "a little document" which would reveal "a certain community of interest" between the Detroit radio priest and the Republican chieftains. The Secretary is to make the first of a series of five speeches in Columbus, Ohio, on Friday night, with others scheduled tentatively for Wilberforce University, Xenia, Ohio, Saturday afternoon; Philadelphia, October 19; Omaha, Nebr., October 22, and Harrisburg, Pa., October 27. He said the Nebraska speech was requested by Senator George Norris, veteran Progressive Republican.

President Roosevelt meanwhile told reporters at his press conference he would work last night, today and tomorrow on the long series of speeches he will make on the tour of the West, which he will begin Friday.

His itinerary, still tentative last night, will be announced definitely today. Tremendous pressure from Democratic leaders in many sections of the country for a personal appearance by the President ac-

$54 in Munitions Sold to Residents Of Pitcairn Island

Perhaps preparing to repel an invasion from Hollywood, residents on the South Pacific's lonely Pitcairn Island, descendants of the Bounty mutineers and their dusky Tahitian brides, have purchased munitions of war from manufacturers in this country to the extent of $54 worth.

The purchase was revealed in a report issued by the State Department listing all export permits for war materials made in the United States by foreign countries in September.

Of course, the munitions export act forbade issuance of permits for export of war material to warring Spain. Ireland (the Irish Free State) was a market for just $2.20 worth of war materials, consisting of revolver ammunition, the report showed.

Biggest purchaser of munitions during the month, the report showed, was China, which bought $782,119 worth, the majority of which was military aircraft and aircraft gun and bomb mountings. Japan bought $89,240 worth, also mostly aircraft.

The only shipments of poison gas materials issued during the month was for $30,000 worth, which went to Czechoslovakia.

Sportsman Says Gallagher's Aid Punched Him in Post-Bout Row

A postcript to the Marty Gallagher-Buck Everett prize fight of Monday night was written yesterday by George W. King, local sportsman.

It was in the form of a warrant for assault, and in it King charged James A. (Jim) McNamara, 6-foot, 250-pound trainer of Gallagher, punched him twice in the eye.

The melee took place in the Annapolis Hotel office of Promoter Joe Turner, where King is the manager. Witnesses said it was short and decisive, in sharp contrast to the bout which Gallagher, the "Pride of Foggy Bottom," lost after 15 rounds.

McNamara, at one time famous as a tackle on the Georgetown University football team, and later a professional wrestler, did not deny the blows.

The quarrel started during the split of Gallagher-Everett "gate."

King said the husky McNamara accused him of rooting for Everett and against Marty at the ringside Monday night. King said he denied this, but that McNamara let him have it in the eye just the same.

McNamara, on the other hand, said it wasn't anything King said about Gallagher's ability that brought on the row, but something of a nature highly personal to Marty.

When McNamara went into Turner's office yesterday, his beaten protege, Gallagher, was with him.

"King," McNamara said, "yelled out, 'What did I tell you?' and he again made the personal remark. I reminded him of the warning I gave him last night, and then I socked him."

The former Hilltop star was arrested by Detective Sergt. Herbert Wanamaker. He gained his release on $25 collateral, but Edward Buckley, his attorney, announced he would be in Police Court this morning to ask a judge to referee his troubles with King.

2 Thugs Captured By a Middle-Aged Capital Caretaker

Odds of two to one meant nothing to Richard Allen, middle-aged caretaker at 2026 Sixteenth street northwest, when he discovered two armed holdup men had entered the residence he guards.

Allen, asleep on a cot, was awakened by the sound of prowlers above him. He investigated, discovered two colored men and grappled with them. He gave them blow for blow and tried to hold them. But they wriggled from his grasp.

Out of the house they went and over a garden wall into the yard of Dr. Samuel Becker. Behind them came Allen, who cornered them, taught them respect for his fists and had them subdued until police came. They were held at the Third Precinct Station on investigation charges.

Allen is caretaker for Dr. John Connor.

Grid Player Killed, 11 Teammates Hurt As Bolt Hits Field

Canton, Ohio, Oct. 6 (AP).—Lightning struck the Lehman High School football squad at practice late this afternoon, killing Don Correll, the team's co-captain, and injuring 11 others, including Coach Jimmy Robinson and Assistant Coach Wilbur Billings.

The injured were taken to Mercy Hospital. Hospital attaches said Robinson was in a serious condition, his lower limbs paralyzed. Three members of the team were being treated for burns and shock. The others were released after first-aid treatment.

The squad was scrimmaging just before the fatal bolt struck.

"The varsity was in a huddle listening to instructions from Coach Robinson," Wallace Ferrell, a witness, said. "There was a blinding flash of light and members of the team fell to the ground. Those who were able, put the injured in cabs and took them to the hospital."

Bonus Application Here Bears Fingerprints of 'Dead' Veteran

Does Jesse Owen Gifford, World War veteran, live?

Gifford was buried five years ago at South Pittsburg, Tenn., according to records there and at the Veterans Administration.

But Gifford has applied for his soldiers' bonus and the fingerprints attached to his application are those of the man who served in the war.

The Jesse Owen Gifford who was buried was identified by the widow, by a dentist who had repaired his teeth and by a merchant who recognized his clothing.

In fact, a man was charged with his murder, but freed at a preliminary hearing.

The mystery of Gifford began eight years ago when he disappeared from South Pittsburg. Nothing was seen or heard of him until three years later a body was found in the Tennessee River.

It was this body which was identified as that of Gifford and it was for his death that a man faced trial. People of South Pittsburgh, the widow and relatives believed Gifford was dead.

But recently the bonus application with fingerprints which can't lie was received at the Veterans' Administration.

South Pittsburgh is excited. Mrs. Gifford has received 'payment' on her husband's bonus. His brother, Henry Gifford, Chattanooga contractor, said the Government had asked that she return the bonus.

Henry Gifford said that he could not believe his brother still lives.

Hawaii Set-Up Revised by U. S. For Drug Drive

Morgenthau Sends Parker, Two Aids to the Islands, Calls Inspector Here.

A shake-up in the Treasury's law enforcement establishment in Hawaii, Pacific crossroads of the Oriental dope traffic, was ordered yesterday by Secretary Morgenthau.

Pursuing his intention of curbing illegal importation of narcotics and co-ordinating the department's enforcement services, Morgenthau made the following changes:

Dispatched Commander Stanley V. Parker, chief of Coast Guard intelligence, to Honolulu to superintend and co-ordinate all anti-smuggling activities in the islands.

Demoted John Oliviera to a clerkship and named Carl F. Eifler, until now a customs inspector stationed in Los Angeles, chief customs inspector of Hawaii in his stead.

Summoned J. Walter Doyle, Honolulu customs inspector, to Washington for a conference. Doyle is en route here and is expected to arrive Monday.

Morgenthau's action is the latest in a series of strategic moves designed to clamp down upon violators of Federal statutes administered by the Treasury, particularly its Narcotics Bureau and Customs Service.

Within the past week the various law enforcement bureaus staged a Nation-wide clean-up drive which netted more than 2,000 suspects. Previously, the Secretary had ordered a number of Coast Guard cutters transferred from Atlantic seaboard service to the Pacific Coast, where the narcotics problem is most acute.

Commander Parker has been on the West Coast for some time. He will sail for Honolulu Friday, accompanied by Eifler. V. O. Bruen, Baltimore customs agent, will assist Parker in attempting to reduce the illegal use of opium and other drugs in the islands and intercept the passage of narcotics en route from the Orient to the United States.

Opium smokers are numerous in Hawaii and many addicts are engaged in smuggling opium, raw and prepared, aboard vessels bound for the American mainland. Morphine, cocaine and heroin also are being handled by these runners, who are well organized.

whether or not it should be during a campaign," the Governor replied.

Landon was asked to what he attributed what he discribed as "censorship."

"As I've already said," he replied, "they're afraid of the waste and extravagance that publicity would reveal."

The nominee made special comment on Hopkins' reference to Stutz's demand.

"I see he's discovered another red herring," Landon said of Hopkins. "The Administration seems to be finding a lot of red herrings. It's gone fishing. It's too bad we can't eat them."

Hopkins, in his statement issued last night, had said "the State of Kansas has never been willing to pay anything toward the aid of the unemployed."

"It is the old charge," Landon said. "Hopkins insists on ignoring that by his own figures—I'm not sure how recent they were—Kansas ranked sixteenth among the States."

He did not amplify the remark. Aids said the Kansas ranking to which the Governor referred was obtained by figuring all relief funds raised in the State on a per capita basis.

Landon spent the afternoon at home, dividing his time between hearing the final World Series game and working on speeches for his next campaign trip. Among advisers close at hand were Prof. Olin Glenn Saxon and Ralph West Robey.

The nominee discussed the St. Lawrence seaway with a delegation of the National Seaway Council headed by Fred J. Freestone, Interlaken, N. Y., chairman of the council's executive committee.

Roosevelt's Pittsburgh Analogy of U. S. Debt Inapt; Are Foreign Investments Lost?

By Franklyn Waltman

ONCE again we turn to President Roosevelt's speech at Forbes Field, Pittsburgh, last week, to get the text for this column. In making up the box score of Mr. Roosevelt's appearance in that baseball park, others have pointed out the hits he has made. We concede several hits, hold an open mind about runs, but contend there were at least three errors—two of which have been described already in this place. Our topic today is the third error.

WALTMAN.

Just as Mr. Roosevelt erroneously cited—as pointed out here two days ago—national income figures to indicate the condition of the country prior to the New Deal was worse than it actually was, he also made reference at Pittsburgh to American investments abroad to justify his spending policy. In the latter instance, Mr. Roosevelt, it appears from the record, spoke as carelessly as he did in the former.

Mr. Roosevelt, at Pittsburgh, asked the country to compare the expenditures of the New Deal and what had been achieved in the last three years "with certain other expenditures of the American people in the years between 1920 and 1930."

"During that period," asserted Mr. Roosevelt, "not merely $8,000,000,000, but many more billions—about $14,000,000,000—came out of American pockets and were sent abroad to foreign countries, where the money was used for increasing foreign armaments, for building foreign factories to compete with us, for building foreign dwellings, swimming pools, slaughter houses; for giving employment to the foreign unemployed—foreign boondoggling, if you like."

"Those dollars, 14,000,000,000 of them, were just as hard earned, just as much the reward of thrift, as the dollars we have spent these past three years at home giving work to the unemployed. But of these dollars sent abroad, they're gone for good. Those billions lost to us under previous Administrations, do not, by the way, include the other billions loaned by the United States to foreign governments during and immediately after the war."

Such was Mr. Roosevelt's statement. Exception might properly be taken to the President's use of an $8,000,000,000 figure for an increase in the gross debt which actually totals $13,000,000,000. It might be said also that his analogy is inapt, since everyone must contribute to New Deal spending, whether he wishes or not, but those who bought foreign bonds acted of their own volition and took a risk to make a profit. It might also be said that part of the money realized in these investments was spent in this country to give work to American workmen.

But we shall pass these things by. What sent us to a search of the records was Mr. Roosevelt's assertion that "most of these dollars sent abroad, they're gone for good." The President's statement meant that much more than one-half of the American investment abroad on private account had been lost and was irrecoverable. Such is not an established fact.

The American foreign investment on private account consists of two major items. One is the outstanding foreign dollar bonds held in this country and the other is what are termed "direct investments." Heavy losses in each of these items have been suffered by American investors and industries—just as heavy losses were suffered by the investors in American securities during the depression period. But that these investments are of such little value that they can be dismissed with the assertion that most of that money is "gone for good" borders on the fantastic.

How much has been lost is a task the economists and statisticians have not yet worked out. But there is substantial value remaining in most of those investments. A part of the foreign dollar securities have been repatriated, and others passed into foreign hands after their issue but before the depression, making it difficult to figure the loss.

But we can get some idea of the value left. The latest study on the status of foreign dollar bonds was made last spring by the Institute of International Finance, a nonprofit-making research organization. As of December 31, 1935, it placed the total of outstanding publicly offered foreign dollar bonds at $7,489,992,000.

This organization found that as of that date the debt service had been paid in full on 61.47 per cent of these securities. There were 37.52 in default as to interest, 1 per cent in default on sinking fund only, and one-tenth of 1 per cent in default on principal only. This organization in its report stated that "the period of large scale defaults on foreign bonds appears to be virtually at an end."

The Commerce Department, which has not made a complete study of the foreign bonds situation since 1933, in general concurs in the accuracy of these percentages, and so do several other economists consulted. So on the foreign bond account Mr. Roosevelt's assertion is not accurate.

Data on the status of the direct investment account is not so complete. But the direct investment was not subject to the dissapation of value that the security account was susceptible to. The Commerce Department places the book value of direct investments abroad at $7,767,000,000 for 1933, and raised it to $7,835,000,000 for 1935. There may be some impairment of that investment not reflected in these figures but it is held not to be large. Indeed, many American corporations doing business abroad have reported better business in those accounts than at home. The profits in 1935 of a list of these companies were 18 per cent higher than in 1934.

But over and above all of this, American foreign investments are bringing money into this country, in annually increasing amounts. In 1933 the Commerce Department, in its statement on international balance of payments, placed receipts form abroad on account of American-held foreign bonds and earnings of American-owned direct investments abroad at $372,000,000. The figure for 1935 was $410,000,000 and for the first six months of this year the department has just reported a figure of $374,000,000—a substantial increase over the comparable figure for the corresponding period of last year.

The value of any investment is the return it pays and its security. Foreign investments now are paying approximately $500,000,000 annually to the American people and their security becomes greater daily as world conditions improve. Most of those dollars sent abroad are far from "gone for good."

Farm Debt Law Is Held Invalid By U. S. Court

Parker Writes 4th Circuit Opinion Upholding Six Virginia Appeals.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 6.—The United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals today held the amended Frazier-Lemke act unconstitutional.

The opinion, affirming the decision of the lower court at Harrisonburg and Roanoke, Va., was written by Judge John J. Parker, of Charlotte, N. C., and became the first handed down by a United States Circuit Court adjuding the amended law invalid.

Court officials said, however, a case from the Eighth Circuit was taken direct to the United States Supreme Court today under writ of certiorari.

The amended act, passed in August, 1935, to take the place of the moratorium law declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court early in 1935, permitted farmers to obtain moratoriums of as much as three years on their mortgages by going into Federal Court, which was authorized to maintain, in effect, control of their property during that time.

Referring to these provisions, Judge Parker declared: "We think it clear that these are far from preserving to the secured creditor the right to immediate foreclosure on default which is given him by the law of Virginia; and they are far different from the judicial discretion exercised by a court of equity in an ordinary foreclosure proceeding, with respect to which the rights of a mortgage creditor may be presumed to have been acquired.

"Likewise as to the control of the property preceding foreclosure, an examination of the statute disclosed that, instead of providing for possession by a receiver with application of rents and profits to the mortgage debt, the debtor is permitted to retain possession, upon such rent as the court may determine, to be applied first to taxes upon the upkeep of the property, i. e., in a manner which will be for the benefit of the debtor, whether the creditor wishes such application or not, the opinion said, this is clearly not the same thing as the right to which the creditor is entitled under the law of Virginia, or the equivalent thereof."

The court cited the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Louisville Bank vs. Radford, supra, and said that as it interpreted it, Congress may not in the exercise of the bankruptcy power substantially impair the rights of a mortgagee of a bankrupt's property.

Appeals in which the opinion was handed down were: Robert Page Wright vs. Vinton Branch of the Mountain Trust Bank, Roanoke, and A. C. Harris, trustee; James Robert Nichols vs. S. V. Kemp, and others; James Wall Flannagan vs. The First & Merchants National Bank of Radford, and others; Annie R. Wharton vs. Emma B. Rhodes in her right and as administratrix; Lacy White Conrad vs. Federal Land Bank of Baltimore, Md., and G. Frank Wolfe vs. The Peoples' Bank of Mt. Jackson, Va., and the Federal Land Bank.

Madrid Bands Execute 3,000 In Secret Raids

Mass Murders in Spite of Government's Efforts Are Described.

Copyright, 1936, by the Associated Press.

Hendaye, France, Oct. 6.—Bands of amateur "executioners" have killed secretly some 3,000 persons in Madrid, reliable advices brought by refugees from the Spanish capital reported tonight.

The executions, they said, were not done with the knowledge or consent of the constituted Madrid government, but were summary executions of those suspected of sedition or Fascist sympathies.

Advices they brought indicated part of the executions were the result of secret sentences of the "cheka," or people's tribunal, while others were the spontaneous work of anarchist and syndicalist gunmen.

82 Slain in One Day.

One day in September, the refugees said, 82 persons were shot to death and left where they fell by the free lance executioners.

On a quiet day, they said, only 15 riddled bodies were heaped on the outskirts of Madrid.

The cheka has little trouble in concealing its true activities from the Madrid police, the refugees related, adding many persons have been executed despit official efforts to save their lives and cheka assurances no harm would befall them.

Executions have increased since Francisco Largo Caballero became premier September 4, the refugees asserted.

New Political Friction.

They said the explanation might be found in new friction over political concessions between the government on the one hand and the Syndicalist National Confederation of Labor with its satellite, the Federation of Iberian Anarchists, on the other.

A day never passes, the refugees reported, without a fresh crop of bodies riddled "with a savage cruelty."

At Cuatro Caminos and on the slopes of San Isidro Hill, they said, women make daily pilgrimages to see if their missing menfolk are among the cadavers left by the executioners.

The police, in efforts to identify the dead, compiled a booklet containing photographs of 250 bodies unidentified during the four weeks from August 14. There also were pictures of 32 unidentified women photographed where their bodies had fallen.

Council Compiles List.

The Madrid County Council made a compilation of its own, with photographs of the bodies of 127 men and 6 women carted in from suburban villages near Madrid.

Refugees said the executions were carried out in a procedure reminiscent of the days of the French revolution terror when aristocrats were beheaded by "Madame Guillotine" with a minimum of legal formality.

Some of the Madrid executioners, they said, shot themselves when their activities were discovered.

A favorite ruse of the executioners, refugees declared, has been to accost "suspects" talking together in the streets.

They would segregate them, they said, and obtain from each privately an account of their conversations. It may be fatal, it was said, if the accounts do not tally.

Dragged Through Streets.

They told of a minor government official being dragged screaming through the streets because syndicalist men apparently were not satisfied as to his identity.

The refugees declared the Madrid government was putting into effect sterner regulations to combat such occurrences.

All persons who receive unwelcome visitors or attention were advised by the government to telephone for a carload of assault or security guards.

But, the refugees added, the only trouble with this was the executioners were disinclined to let their victims telephone, much less wait for the arrival of the assault guards.

"Merciless treatment will be meted out to all guilty of such horrible crimes," the government said, but refugees declared the authorities were having a hard time finding out which individuals were responsible.

Hitler Denounces Bolshevist 'Perils'

Berlin, Oct. 6 (AP).—Reichfuehrer Adolf Hitler, charging that post-war Germany was "brought to the brink of an abyss through Bolshevist machinations," drew loud applause from a huge Berlin audience tonight.

Opening the Nazi winter relief campaign, Hitler advised Germans to submit cheerfully to periodic "one-dish dinners" to swell the relief fund.

"To objectors I say maybe you are alive today only thanks to the victory of national socialism over bolshevism," he cried.

Elliott Blocks Fee Spending In Horse Tests

Rules Use of Contributed Funds by Narcotics Bureau Illegal.

The Treasury Department's drive on race horse drugging was hit yesterday by a ruling from the Acting Comptroller General against use by the Narcotics Bureau of funds taken as fees for testing horses suspected of being drugged.

In a letter to Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, Acting Comptroller R. N. Elliott held that it would be illegal for the Narcotics Bureau to add to its personnel or equipment with money obtained from State racing commissions for making saliva tests—the bureau's standard means of determining whether handlers of horses have been administering doses of narcotics in the hope of improving chances of race entries.

In his ruling Elliott linked the question of increased Federal activities—one of the leading issues of the Presidential campaign—to the drugging of horses, a widespread racing practice which Treasury agents have been combating for several years.

The ruling was in reply to a request for advice by Morgenthau, who is eager to extend his current anti-narcotics drive to American race tracks. The secretary wished to know whether the Treasury, through its Washington laboratories, might accept reimbursement from the various State racing authorities submitting saliva for analysis.

Elliott's reply, which was more than two months in the composition, stated in effect that Congress alone makes appropriations for the Bureau of Narcotics and funds from other sources are unauthorized. While the various States may, if they like, make contributions to the Federal branch, such funds may not be used "for the purchase of additional equipment or the placing of additional employes upon the regular pay rolls, as that would suggest a regular appropriation beyond the amounts appropriated by Congress."

Treasury officials, observing the loophole provided in the word "additional," expressed the opinion that Elliott's ruling does not forbid the continuance of saliva test analyses for State commissions as long as such extra-curricular work does not necessitate the hiring of more employes and purchases of more equipment.

The Narcotics Bureau has developed an effective method of testing the saliva of a race horse to determine whether it was drugged before going to the post. Many State racing commissions, impressed by the method, have ruled that each thoroughbred must submit to the analysis after winning a race. Nevertheless, their laboratory facilities, as a whole, are inadequate, hence the increasing number of requests to the Treasury for this service on a fee basis.

9 Miners Plunge 900 Feet to Death

By the Associated Press.

Mullan, Idaho, Oct. 6.—Nine miners plummeted 900 feet to their death today when a cable broke, dropping a three-deck cage to the bottom of a 3,950-foot mine shaft.

The cable snapped about 1,400 feet above the cage, which even before it dropped was 3,050 feet down in the Morning mine.

As the cage cracked to the bottom of the shaft, 55,600 pounds of steel cable piled down upon it, crushing the elevator and its human cargo.

The bodies were so mangled immediate identification of some was impossible.

Swede Soaring Over Atlantic To Stockholm

She didn't want to talk to anyone, an attendant reported.

It had been announced all along she would share the controls with Bjorkvall, but she went to the air field today to be turned aside by the flier with an eloquent "No!" spoken twice.

Why, none learned, except it was said the Swedish newspaper which had been backing the flight had withdrawn its support, and Bjorkvall had bought the plane to make the trip on his own. There were reports of Swedish criticism of permitting the baroness to make such a hazardous attempt this late in the season.

The flier had made quiet preparations, and his scheduled passenger said she hadn't learned he planned to take off today until, before dawn, a friend told her. She hurried to the field, carrying a quart of coffee and dressed for air travel, but Bjorkvall would say only that he was sorry, but he couldn't take her.

Only Radio Receiver.

Late in the day there had been no report of his position. The ship, the Pacemaker, carried only a radio receiver.

Weather prospects off the Newfoundland coast were not encouraging when Bjorkvall lifted his ship, carrying 8,000 pounds, off Floyd Bennett Field here at 7:35 a. m., but later advices said conditions would be fair.

He had made provisions for a possible drop into the Atlantic—table tennis balls added buoyancy to the plane's wings and he carried a life preserver. The food supply he took along was the most ample noted in any similar flight in years—roast chicken, bananas, tomatoes and a gallon of coffee.

Mother, Baby Slain With Ax; Woodman Held

By the United Press.

Shreveport, La., Oct. 6.—C. B. Hewitt, 28-year-old woodcutter, was held for investigation tonight as officers sought the hatchet attacker who hacked pretty Mrs. Frances Boyter, 21, and her infant daughter and left them to die in their blazing home.

When the double tragedy was discovered at the Boyter home three miles from Vivian, La.—40 miles northwest of here—authorities believed the deaths were due to an accidental fire.

Skull Fractured.

After Coroner W. P. Butler performed an autopsy, he announced the young wife was the victim of an attempted criminal assault, had suffered a 10-inch skull fracture and had been stabbed.

Examination of the baby's body did not disclose whether the 20-month-old Kay Frances Boyter died of stab wounds or burns.

Hewitt, his father, and two colored men were cutting logs in woodlands near the lonely Boyter home when one man saw smoke from the house. He ran toward the house with C. B. Hewitt, with Hewitt outdistancing him, the man told Sheriff T. R. Hughes. When the colored man arrived at the flaming home, Hewitt allegedly was dragging the semiconscious Mrs. Boyter through weeds near the house, he said.

Baby Badly Burned.

The baby was found in the house, badly burned and apparently hacked by the hatchet that killed the mother, authorities said. The small home had been fired with kerosene. Officers believed the flames and smoke had aroused the young mother and that she crawled out into the yard. Her body was badly burned.

Boyter, a refinery worker at Vivian, was summoned and arrived to find his wife dying in the yard of their home. The only coherent words she uttered before dying in a hospital at Shreveport were to ask the whereabouts of her baby.

counted for the delay, White House attaches said.

Three major speeches are fairly certain, however, it was indicated. After the departure Friday, a speech in Omaha Saturday is regarded as definite. Two others are believed set, one for Chicago October 14 and one at Detroit October 15.

After the Omaha speech, the President is expected to proceed to Denver, Colo., probably via Cheyenne, Wyo., and thence back East, possibly through Kansas, to Chicago and Detroit, with the return to Hyde Park about 10 days after leaving here. Appearances in Ohio and New York en route home are considered possibilities, and unsubstantial reports have held the President will make a Philadelphia speech before going home to his mansion on the Hudson.

Landon's Itinerary Ready.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull will speak in Minneapolis tonight, in answer to Gov. Landon's attack on the reciprocal trade agreements.

Acting Secretary of War Harry H. Woodring is slated to make an address this week and other Cabinet members are either already on the road for the New Deal or preparing itineraries for October, in which all doubtful areas will be thoroughly canvassed by Administration leaders.

In the meantime, announcement was made yesterday at Topeka, Kans., of the itinerary of Gov. Landon's fourth major campaign swing. In Chicago Friday night he will discuss the Federal budget, in Cleveland next Monday night he will talk on the Civil Service, in Detroit, next Tuesday he will attack relief administration by the New Deal. Many rear platform talks are scheduled for Illinois, Ohio, Michigan and Indiana.

The President, asked yesterday for the topics of his coming addresses, smiled noncommittally and refused to divulge them.

The Ickes address in Columbus is expected to parallel his speech of August 27, when he took to the air to charge a close alliance between William Randolph Hearst and Gov. Landon, producing as his "documentary evidence" a memorandum submitted as evidence in a Chicago trial, in which Hearst allegedly sent George F. Harding, Republican National Committeeman of Illinois, instructions for the Landon campaign.

Coughlin Denies "Bargain."

Detroit, Oct. 6 (AP).—The Rev. Charles E. Coughlin said tonight he made "no bargain with the Republicans."

The priest made the statement in response to a statement in Washington by Secretary Ickes that he would produce a document at Columbus, Ohio, Friday night "to show a very definite connection between the Republican high command and Father Coughlin."

"I would rather be with the Republicans, though," the radio priest said, "than with Ickes, the Democrats and the Communists."

He said he had indorsed "a few Republican candidates" for Congress, "and a few Democrats as well."

"But I have never indorsed any Communists," he added, "and that is more than Jim Farley and Mr. Ickes can say."

Mayor M'Nair Ends Tumultuous Career In Single Sentence

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, Oct. 6.—William N. McNair brought his tumultuous mayoralty career to an end today with an unceremonious one-sentence resignation and went back to the obscure little law office from which he emerged four years ago.

The mayor stepped aside, he explained, to end the financial chaos arising out of city council's refusal to confirm his appointee for city treasurer. He said, "I hereby resign from the office as mayor of the city of Pittsburgh.

Without a treasurer, the city's pay rolls were frozen and thousands were going unpaid.

Only a few hours after McNair submitted his resignation to City Clerk Edward B. Schofield, members of the council held a special meeting and designated their president, Cornelius D. Scully, to succeed him.

Scully, who managed McNair's successful mayoralty campaign in 1932, took the oath of office immediately.

His first act was to reappoint James P. Kirk, the city treasurer whose dismissal led to the financial turmoil after council refused to confirm the successor named by McNair, William B. Foster.

Although elected on the Democratic ticket, McNair broke with the party shortly after taking office and he has been in almost constant warfare with the Democratic council over appointments and policies. Kirk is the Democratic county chairman.

Move to Wreck Train Is Balked In Garrett Park

Mystery Tamperer Escapes After Driving Flanges in B. & O. Tracks.

The vigilance of two Baltimore & Ohio signalmen balked an attempt to wreck a St. Louis-New York train barely a half-hour before the crack express roared through the Garrett Park (Md.) station yesterday morning.

Iron flanges, about 4 inches long, were driven into a junction between two rails on the east-bound track by an unidenitfied white man, who escaped into the woods when railroad men approached.

Railroad officials said the flanges almost certainly would have derailed the train had the attempt gone unobserved.

The signal men, John Crawford and Fred Oden, both of Silver Spring, were riding eastward on the track when they noticed the track had been tampered with. They removed the obstruction and went to the Garrett Park station, where they reported the matter to E. H. Wallace, agent there.

As they were about to leave they noticed a man on the track about a half mile from the station. Accompanied by Wallace, they returned to the spot and found a second flange had been driven between a "frog" and the rail.

The man fled into the woods on the White Flint Country Club grounds and escaped.

Extension of Emergency Right to Revalue Dollar His Purpose.

new use—maintenance of conditional stabilization of currencies involved in the tripartite "gentlemen's agreement" between the United States, Great Britain and France.

The value of the United States dollar now remains at the 59.06-cent level to which it was cut by the President by his proclamation of January, 1934, placing this Nation on what the Treasury called at the time a "iternational gold bullion standard."

But the President has authority—until January 30—to cut the gold content of the dollar again, down to a 50-cent level. The margin was originally designed apparently to give the Executive leeway to combat foreign competitive depreciation of too drastic a nature.

There is certain to be strong opposition in Congress to a further extension of this authority beyond January 30, despite assurance that it would not be used except to protect domestic values against unforseen world developments.

There would be less, if any, opposition to continued use of the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund as an instrument for protection of the dollar in foreign exchange and preserving the "internal prosperity" objectives of the new tripartite monetary agreement. Although the two were originally authorized in the same piece of legislation, they do not necessarily go hand in hand.

Intimation that the President would seek extension of his power to devalue the dollar between 50 and 60 per cent of its value prior to the original devaluation proclamation, came in response to a question at yesterday's White House press conference.

The President was asked whether existing power for further devaluation of the dollar could be allowed to lapse as long as the value of the British pound sterling was fixed by the London free gold market.

He replied that in order to retain the primary purpose of America's monetary policy—preservation of domestic values—emergency powers should be vested in the Federal Government to prevent their destruction by unexpected action, by other nations, or by unexpected world convulsion.

President's Son In Planes Deal, Fokker Swears

Elliott Roosevelt Signed Contract for Soviet Sales, He Says.

davit said, wanted young Roosevelt to go abroad with him, "counting on the willingness of high foreign officials to receive Mr. Roosevelt as the son of the American President."

The foreign trip was canceled, according to the affidavit, after Elliott telephoned his father and "had been told by the President that he had objection to Mr. Elliott Roosevelt's traveling abroad in this connection, but had approved the contract with Mr. Fokker."

Frank A. Tichenor, publisher of Aero Digest, in an article recently appearing in his magazine, charged Elliott Roosevelt tried to sell planes to the Soviet Union, and had accepted a $5,000 retainer in cash from Fokker.

Nye Target of Attack.

The New York Sun yesterday quoted Tichenor as further charging that the Senate Munitions Committee had concrete evidence of an attempt made by Elliott in 1934 to sell military airplanes in the guise of commercial ships.

Tichenor, in the Sun interview, was reported to have assailed Nye for failing to disclose the information.

"Senator Nye's explanation that his Munitions Committee did not probe or make public Elliott Roosevelt's connection with the attempted sale of military airplanes to Soviet Russia because there was not sufficient evidence before them and they had no funds with which to dig deeper, sounds to me like the vapid alibi of a political demagogue," Tichenor was quoted as saying.

Later last night the affidavit, said to have been in the possession of the Senate Munitions Committee for more than a year, was made public by the Nye committee.

Fokker's agreement with Elliott Roosevelt was dated February 28, 1934, according to the munitions committee affidavit. Fokker stated, it said, that it covered "the expected sale of 50 military airplanes of Lockheed make to Russia at an expected price to allow a commission of $500,000 to himself and $500,000 to Elliott Roosevelt."

Learning that the Douglas Aircraft Co. had made arrangements with Elliott and his associates to sell Douglas planes to Russia, Fokker was quoted in the affidavit as saying he met young Roosevelt in Douglas' office at the California plant of the Douglas Aircraft Co. in early 1934, "and that Mr. Stratton (Granville W. Stratton, said to be Elliott's 'agent'), Mr. Douglas and Mr. (Elliott) Roosevelt were present."

Thought Prices Excessive.

In the affidavit, Fokker was quoted as saying he had thought the prices to be quoted to Russia on the sale of the planes "notably excessive, but that he had been persuaded by Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Roosevelt's associate, Mr. Stratton, that Mr. Roosevelt had enough influence with the Import and Export Bank and the Russian Purchasing Commission, then in the country, to swing the deal at that excessive price."

The affidavit added:

"He relied upon the attitude taken by Mr. Douglas, of the Douglas company, concerning the expected influence of Mr. Elliott Roosevelt on the Import and Export Bank and on the Russian commission coupled with the general expectation that Russian debt negotiations then taking place would result in Russian purchases of very considerable amounts in this country."

The affidavit said Fokker was questioned concerning correspondence dated May 9, 1934, he had with his American business representative, Carter Tiffany, of New York, in which Tiffany was alleged to have stated "I feel that Elliott, Stratton and Reed have done nothing but chisel in on your affairs under 'pretenses.'"

According to the affidavit, Fokker replied "that he had not had that impression originally because of the confidence expressed by Mr. Elliott Roosevelt and Mr. Stratton of their ability to swing the deal at the high price."

"Did Not Like Contact."

The deposition quoted Tiffany as saying he had been called upon by Franklin K. Lane, jr., son of a former Cabinet officer, representing both Elliott Roosevelt and Stratton. The affidavit said Fokker stated "that he had had no dealing with Mr. Lane or anyone else in political life while in California other than Mr. Elliott Roosevelt."

"When in the course of the deposition," the affidavit continued, "Mr. Tiffany was questioned further and stated in Mr. Fokker's presence that he, Mr. Tiffany, had complained to Mr. Stratton that he did not like the contract because it was one-sided against Mr. Fokker and entirely in favor of Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Stratton had informed him, Mr. Tiffany, that he had better go through with the contract and that they had had contracts with other people who had also not liked those contracts but had gone through with them after Mr. Stratton had turned on the heat. Mr. Fokker stated his satisfaction with Mr. Tiffany's method of concluding the contract in the way he did, involving a cash payment of $5,000 for Mr. Roosevelt, and the payment of a further check of $6,666."

Stopped Payment on Check.

The affidavit said the last check was made through a brokerage house "which it was difficult for Mr. Elliott Roosevelt to accept in view of the President's disputes with Wall street at the time," adding:

"Mr Tiffany and Mr. Fokker both stated that the check had never been cashed or returned but that Mr. Tiffany had finally stopped payment on it."

Fokker was quoted as saying at the outset of the deposition that his reputation as an airplane man "is sufficient guarantee of his success in selling those planes he is promoting and that he has, generally speaking, not needed to resort to corruption of governmental officials."

Article Is Quoted.

The New York Sun yesterday said it had called on Senator Nye for a statement after an article appeared in the Aero Digest "in which Mr. Tichenor charged that Elliott Roosevelt tried to sell planes to the Soviet Union, accepted a $5,000 retainer in cash from Anthony H. G. Fokker—denying later to the Internal Revenue Bureau that he had received it—and was trying to promote a $2,000,000 national air line monopoly at the time when the air mail contracts were canceled by the Roosevelt Administration."

It was after Senator Nye's reported reply that there was not sufficient evidence, and the committee lacked funds to investigate, that Tichenor was quoted in the Sun as saying that the files which Nye's "process servers seized were full of data showing that the plane sales plan was to sell military airplanes in Russia, despite the American embargo on such shipments."

Tichenor was quoted further in the Sun interview as saying:

"There was even a signed and canceled copy of the contract that fell into Senator Nye's hands. It read in part:

"'Dear Mr. Roosevelt.

"'This will confirm our conversation of today, at which the following arrangement was decided upon:

"'You are to incorporate a company to be known as the Elliott Roosevelt, Incorporated, which is to be organized for the purpose of conducting, among other things, sales negotiations * * *

Commission Mentioned.

"'On any sales of airplanes similar to the "Electra" model airplane to the Soviet Union, a commission shall be paid to your corporation, providing the order is secured within one year from date.'"

The Sun said Tichenor also quoted from a letter sent Stratton by Herbert A. Reed, as follows:

"The cost of the airplane to Tony is $37,834. There is included in this item approximately $2,800 each to him for his financial outlay (assuming that he actually does or does not make it) for motors, propellers, starters and generators. This is in accordance with the talk the four of us had at E. R.'s house on February 28, 1934."

Tichenor said in the published interview that February 28, 1934, "was the date on which Elliott Roosevelt's contract with Fokker was finally drafted," adding:

"But there was nothing here, Senator Nye says, to warrant his munitions committee digging deeper—anyway, they didn't have sufficient funds."

Text of Deposition on Elliott Roosevelt Made by Fokker to Nye Committee

ficient guarantee of his success in selling those planes he is promoting, and that he has, generally speaking, not needed to resort to corruption of governmental officials. In this connection he was questioned concerning his letter to Douglas Aircraft, dated May 15, 1934, and attached herewith as exhibit Fokker A, in which a reference to "official and secret commissions," is made on page 5.

He stated in this connection that the airplane business was not yet in the class with the general munitions business but was rapidly growing very large.

He stated that the munitions business is a dirty business, partly because it is so big and so much is at stake on the decision of one or two governmental officials who have a responsibility of deciding transactions involving millions of dollars and whose personal fortunes may be made by an advantageous commission to themselves or through the certainty of later on securing a position with the private company seeking to make the sale.

Vickers Co., of England, as well as Krupp and Schneider-Creusot and Skoda were among the largest armament firms in Europe referred to in this statement. Vickers is known throughout the munitions business as engaged heavily in this form of procuring orders and might be considered to set the rate for the other companies. Even in cases where it is possible to stay clear of this form of securing business, as Mr. Fokker was able to stay clear of it in Turkey, a practice has been established whereby subordinate officials are generally accustomed to receive gratuities and failure to receive them involves the danger that they will sabotage the airplanes and munitions once received.

Industry Not Organized.

After the World War the German munitions companies established factories in other countries and proceeded to do business outside of the geographical limits covered by the clauses of the Treaty of Versailles, which forbade Germany to manufacture more than a certain amount of munitions. Junkers established a factory in Denmark, Dornier established a factory in Switzerland and Krupp established one in Sweden called Befors. In this connection, Mr. Fokker was questioned concerning his letter of May 15, 1934 (Exhibit Fokker A) in which he states on page two "selling the licenses to the Swiss factory of Fornier at Alten Rhein means disclosing all the technical information to the Dornier Co. in Germany——." He stated that the airplane business was not yet organized in the way the general armament and munitions business was organized.

Mr. Fokker stated further that while airplanes would play a very important part in a future war, the final fighting would still have to be done with the infantry. Mr. Fokker stated that it is the number of planes which will be the deciding factor in another war, not merely a few superior planes. . . .

Questioned concerning his expectation of a world war in the immediate future, he stated that he did not expect this war to break out until the large munitions manufacturers had had a larger opportunity to fill their materials to the countries most concerned. At present, he stated, it was his opinion that none of the countries felt they had enough of this material to really be willing to engage in a large war.

No Secrets Any Longer.

Mr. Fokker stated that there are no secrets in airplane building any longer and that the reason for his doing a business in licenses is due to the fact that it is cheaper and quicker to buy a license than to go through the expense of copying a design without the plans and designs, and that since time is so great an element in airplane construction it is better to buy a license and be able to start construction than to go to the expense of setting up costly testing laboratories, etc., which would be involved in copying.

Mr. Fokker stated that he had none of the documents in America requested under the subpena served upon him, hereby attached as Exhibit B, since they are in the possesssion of General Aviation, except those in the possession of Mr. Carter Tiffany, of 61 Broadway, which had been examined by committee before the taking of this deposition.

Mr. Fokker, upon being questioned, stated further that he had no agreements with other agents to sell American planes to foreign countries other than an agreement with Elliott Roosevelt dated February 28, 1934, and attached as exhibit Fokker C, and that this agreement covered the expected sale of 50 military airplanes of Lockheed make to Russia at an expected price to allow a commission of $500,000 to himself and $500,000 to Elliott Roosevelt, as evidenced by further letters concerning this agreement and prices, hereby attached is exhibit Fokker D (March 22, 1934, Reed to Stratton) and exhibit E of the same date, and other correspondence filed with Mr. Tiffany . . .

Mr. Fokker explained that in the early part of 1934 he had entered negotiations with the Douglas Aircraft Co. for sales and licensing agreement, and later discovered that he could not procure an exclusive sales agency for Russia because it had been given to Mr. Elliott Roosevelt and certain partners in business with him. He signed an agreement with the Douglas company dated January 15, 1934, in which he is given the right to sell and license certain Douglas planes "whether used for civilian or military purposes in any country in Europe with the exception of Russia." For the license he paid $100,000. This contract is attached as Fokker Exhibit F. Having discovered that the Douglas Aircraft Co. had made arrangements with Mr. Elliott Roosevelt and his associates to sell Douglas planes to Russia, Mr. Fokker then approached Mr. Roosevelt, who had been introduced to him by Mr. Douglas and made a contract with Mr. Roosevelt for the sale of military Lockheed planes. Mr. Fokker states that he met Mr. Elliott Roosevelt in Mr. Douglas' office at the California plant of the Douglas Aircraft Co. in early 1934 and that Mr. Stratton, Mr. Douglas and Mr. Roosevelt were present. At this and other times Mr. Douglas conveyed to Mr. Fokker his impression that Mr. Roosevelt could swing the Russian business . . .

It was expected at the time that Russia would be more interested in the military planes than in the commercial planes represented by the Douglas type.

Price Not Reasonable.

Mr. Fokker already had signed an agreement to be sales agent for the Lockhead electra type plane in Europe, including Russia. The agreement signed with Elliott Roosevelt was a special agreement for the sale of these planes in Russia. Questioned concerning why he had signed an agreement which provided for such a large commission, that is, $500,000 to Mr. Roosevelt and $500,000 to himself upon the completion of the sale, Mr. Fokker explained that he had not felt that the prices which it was proposed to charge the Russians for these 50 military planes were at all reasonable; in fact he had thought them notably excessive but that he had been persuaded by Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Roosevelt's associate, Mr. Stratton, that Mr. Roosevelt had enough influence with the Import and Export Bank and the Russian purchasing commission, then in the country, to swing the deal at that excessive price. He relied upon the attitude taken by Mr. Douglas, of the Douglas Co. concerning the expected influence of Mr. Elliott Roosevelt on the Import and Export Bank and on the Russian commission coupled with the general expectation that Russian debt negotiations then taking place would result in Russian purchases of very considerable amounts in this country.

Mr. Fokker stated that before the agreement with Mr. Elliott Roosevelt had been signed, he had desired Mr. Elliott Roosevelt to make a trip abroad with Mr. Fokker to attempt to sell airplanes to various governments, counting on the willingness of high foreign officials to receive Mr. Roosevelt as the son of the American President.

When in the course of taking the deposition, Mr. Carter Tiffany, in Mr. Fokker's presence, stated that Mr. H. A. Reed had reported to Mr. Tiffany that before the contract was signed with Mr. Fokker, Mr. Elliott Roosevelt had telephoned the President of the United States from California concerning the arrangement to travel abroad as Mr. Fokker's agent, and gave the President the main details of his proposed contract with Mr. Fokker and had been told by the President that he had objection to Mr. Elliott Roosevelt's traveling abroad in this connection, but had approved the contract with Mr. Fokker. Mr. Fokker stated that he had not been told the details himself but had gathered the impression that Mr. Elliott Roosevelt had found it impossible to travel abroad as his representative. This matter of a trip abroad was never entered in any of the drafts of the contract with Elliott Roosevelt, but was in the form of a gentlemen's agreement until vetoed.

Mr. Fokker stated that the price calculated by Mr. Roosevelt and his associates and offered to the Russians, was so high that the Russians would have nothing to do with the whole business and had not bought any of the planes. * * *

Cites Visit by Lane.

Mr. Fokker was questoned concernng the correspondence between Mr. Tiffany and himself, in the course of which Mr. Tiffany stated (exhibit G, May 9, 1934) "I feel that Elliott, Stratton and Reed have done nothing but chisel in on your affair under 'pretence.' Mr. Fokker replied that he had not had that impression originally because of the confidence expressed by Mr. Elliott Roosevelt and Mr. Stratton of their ability to swing the deal at the high price. He was then questioned concerning a letter which Mr. H. A. Reed wrote to Mr. Tiffany on June 20, 1934 (exhibit H attached) in the course of whch Mr. Reed stated, "Mr. Stratton resents very much a letter which Tony (Fokker) wrote to Douglas after his trip to Russia. In this letter he tried to get Douglas to handle the sale of planes to Russia and called Stratton and Elliott Roosevelt chiselers." Mr. Fokker explained that apparently by that time he had come to that conclusion since no action had been taken toward the successful sale of Lockheed planes by Mr. Roosevelt and his associates . . .

When in the course of the deposition, Mr. Tiffany was asked to clarify the situation in certain respects and stated that he had been called upon by Mr. Franklin K. Lane, jr., son of a former Cabinet member representing Mr. Elliott Roosevelt and also representing Mr. Elliott Roosevelt and also representing Mr. Stratton, Mr. Fokker stated that he had had no dealing with Mr. Lane or any one else in political life while in California other than Mr. Elliott Roosevelt. When in the course of the deposition, Mr. Tiffany was questioned further and stated in Mr. Fokker's presence that he, Mr. Tiffany, had complained to Mr. Stratton that he did not like the contract because it was one-sided against Mr. Fokker and entirely in favor of Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Stratton had informed him, Mr. Tiffany, that he had better go through with the contract and that they had had contracts with other people who had also not liked those contracts but had gone through with them after Mr. Stratton had turned on the heat, Mr. Fokker stated his satisfaction with Mr. Tiffany's method of concluding the contract in the way he did, involving a cash payment of $5,000 for Mr. Roosevelt, and the payment of a further check of $6,666, through a brokerage house which it was difficult for Mr. Elliott Roosevelt to accept in view of the President's disputes with Wall street at the time. Mr. Tiffany and Mr. Fokker both stated that the check had never been cashed or returned but that Mr. Tiffany had finally stopped payment on it . . .

Questioned concerning the sale of the Douglas license, he, Mr. Fokker, stated that his Dutch company had sold it, together with his Dutch type license, to Airspeed, a British company, for £40,000, and that he had attempted to sell the Lockheed license to the French government (see Exhibit A, page 4, paragraph 8), but that the Lockheed plane had not lived up to its claims and that the French government, under pressure of its own aviation companies, had declined to go through with the transaction after the failure of Lockheed to meet its performance.

Mr. Fokker learned that there had been a plan at the time of the Roosevelt agreement by which he, Fokker, might take an option on some Lockheed stock at some discount. He stated that in any such transaction, Reed was representing him, rather than Mr. Roosevelt, or anyone else, and that he generally considered, at that time, Mr. Reed as his employe and the employe of no one else.

I, Anthony Fokker, of Alpine, N. J., having read the foregoing deposition on September 18, 1935, in Washington, District of Columbia, swear that it is true and correct to the best of my knowledge, and that I have signed my initials to every page of it and herewith affixed my signature to the whole.

Elliott Entered Aviation Field In Southwest

Became Official of Line Owned Mainly by Rep. Greenway in 1933.

Elliott Roosevelt, the President's second son, entered the aviation field in 1933, when he became vice president of the Gilpin Air Lines, operating between Los Angeles and Agua Caliente, Mexico.

This line was owned principally by Representative Isabella Greenway (Democrat), of Arizona. Shortly after young Roosevelt's connection with the line it ceased operations.

Roosevelt, who is 23, then became aviation editor of the Los Angeles Examiner, and in this capacity also served as aviation editor of the Hearst newspapers.

Divorced From Wife.

Upon his resignation from the Gilpin Air Lines, Roosevelt went to Nevada, where he established residence. In July, 1933, he was divorced from his wife, the former Elizabeth Bonner, of Philadelphia.

Five days after his divorce he married Ruth Josephine Googins, of Fort Worth, Tex., in a ceremony at Burlington, Iowa. In May, 1934, a daughter was born to the couple at Fort Worth. The baby was the fifth grandchild of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

In June, 1934, Roosevelt was elected vice president of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce after a bitter fight between officials of airplane manufacturing companies and air lines.

Soon after he became connected with the chamber Roosevelt became interested in promoting an 18,000-mile plane race around South America, in which, it was reported, Gen. Hugh Johnson would be associated with him. This project apparently was dropped quietly.

Took Radio Post.

In October, 1935, the late Brig. Gen. William Mitchell charged before the House Committee on Patents that Elliott Roosevelt once worked for a "powerful lobby" that dictated the Nation's aviation policy.

Elliott Roosevelt branded this statement as "pure libel," and denied he ever had participated in any lobbying activity.

While in Texas, Elliott became vice president of the Young Democratic Clubs of the State. In June, 1935, an attempt was made to oust him from this post. But the State executive committee voted 14-1 against this. Previously the Dallas club had voted 15-12 against a resolution calling for his removal.

In September, 1935, Roosevelt resigned from the vice presidency of the Texas clubs with the statement: "I was not forced out."

Swiss Fight Nazism.

Berne, Switzerland, Oct. 6 (AP).—The Swiss Government took steps today to combat the spread of Nazism in the republic. The Legislature asked the Federal council, executive arm of the government, to submit a bill to it withdrawing citizenship from naturalized foreigners who fail to sever their political connections in their former countries or who prove themselves "unworthy."

Demurrer Is Filed In School Dispute

The school fate of hundreds of nonresident pupils continued to hang in the balance yesterday as attorneys jockeyed into position for a hearing of the case of Lois Kemp, 11-year-old Clarendon (Va.) girl, who wants to be enrolled in Gordon Junior High School.

Replying to Superintendent Frank W. Ballou's statement to the court that Lois, a nonresident, cannot be admitted to Gordon because of overcrowded conditions there, Robert E. Lynch, the Kemp attorney, said he filed a demurrer yesterday. He contended Dr. Ballou's reply was insufficient—that it did not adequately "show cause why" Lois should be barred.

In a statement on the crowded situation at Gordon, Dr. Ballou did not explain why the Kemp girl should be denied the education to which she is entitled by law, Lynch charged.

Vernon E. West, assistant corporation counsel, handling the case for the Board of Education, said last night he would file an answer to Lynch's demurrer.

British Police Official Visits Brown, Hoover

Inspector William J. McKay, formerly of Scotland Yard and now commandant of detectives in New South Wales, arrived here yesterday for a brief tour of inspection of Washington police and Washington police methods.

He first visited Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, and then went to the Department of Justice, where he met J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. He next will go to Atlantic City.

Rainbow Division Seeks Names of Star Mothers

William H. Kay, president of the District chapter of the Rainbow Division Veterans Association, announced yesterday he was anxious to list names and addresses of Gold Star Mothers of members of the division.

He also wants to know names, addresses and relationship of the nearest male relatives of deceased veterans of the division.

Peace Overture On A. F. L. Split Denied by Lewis

Lifting of C. I. O. Union Bar, Mass Industry Drive Required, He Says.

By Felix Bruner.

John L. Lewis, head of the Committee for Industrial Organization, said yesterday no move has been made to bring peace within the ranks of organized labor and that his organization is going ahead with its drive for unionization of workers in the steel, rubber and automobile industries. At the same time he predicted a sweeping victory for President Roosevelt in States where the United Mine Workers of America, of which he is president, are strong.

Lewis made his statement in reply to reports that steps had been taken to close the breach in the American Federation of Labor caused by suspension of ten unions belonging to the C. I. O. The reports followed an assertion by David Dubinsky, head of the Ladies' Garment Workers, that his union might consider a compromise with the federation if the latter would go ahead with organization of workers in mass industries.

Dubinsky's proposal, Lewis said, was the same the C. I. O. has been making all the time. He fixed as the price of peace withdrawal of the suspension order and active cooperation in the formation of industrial unions. Meanwhile, William Green, president of the Federation, following a conference with President Roosevelt at Hyde Park, had forecast "possible steps to settle the whole controversy through conferences."

"I know of no peace offers," said Lewis. "No representative of the Federation has conferred with any representative of the C. I. O. If Mr. Green wants peace all he has to do is have his executive council rescind suspension of the ten unions. I would take it for granted that if the suspension order is rescinded the council would have a change of heart in regard to organization of industrial unions. But they have exhibited no desire to do so.

The federation's executive council will meet here tomorrow to discuss plans for the federation convention in Tampa, Fla., next month.

"The attitude of the C. I. O. has not changed a bit," he said. "It is going ahead with organization of these industries. We would like to do it with the American Federation of Labor, but we will go ahead anyway."

Lewis said he believed the International Typographical Union, which recently voted in convention to support the C. I. O. is in the same position as the suspended unions.

"If the federation does not suspend the Typographical Union it will be an admission of error in suspending the other unions," he said.

He added that the steel organization campaign is proceeding "according to chart, graph and blueprint." A complete organization already is functioning in all important steel centers, he added. He revealed that the C. I. O. has 175 paid organizers in the field.

Lewis said he could not make public the union membership in the steel industry. In the rubber industry, he said, there are 28,000 union members and in the automobile industry there are 60,000.

There is a "reasonable likelihood," he said, that in the near future the movement in the steel industry will crystalize to the point where specific demands will be made upon employers.

Turning to politics, Lewis said that on a recent trip to Illinois, Indiana and Ohio he found enthusiastic sentiment for President Roosevelt.

Girl Killed by Car Of Mrs. Marbury

A car operated by Mrs. Dolly Marbury, of Upper Marlboro, Md., wife of Charles Marbury, member of the Maryland House of Deleagtes, last night struck and fatally injured a 3-year-old colored girl near Meadows, Md.

Police say the child, Mildred Roney, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wililam H. Roney, of Summit, N. J., ran across the road in front of the Marbury car.

Acting Coroner Thomas Griffith, justice of the peace at Forestville, Md., and Dr. James Boyd said the girl died from skull and other injuries. An inquest will be held later in the week.

French Count and Wife Watch Series on Post's Scoreboard

COUNT AND COUNTESS RENE ADELBERT DE CHAMBRUN.

Nephew of Longworth, Who Married Marie Jose Laval in 1935, Is His Country's Baseball Fan No. 1; Is Here on Business.

Watching The Post's World Series scoreboard yesterday with his attractive brunette wife was Count Rene Adelbert de Chambrun, France's baseball fan No. 1.

The count, a nephew of the late Speaker Nicholas Longworth, is an honorary citizen of the United States since an old law confers that distinction upon direct descendants of Lafayette.

That the count should be keenly interested in baseball is only natural. His mother is the famous Clara Longworth, of Cincinnati, and, as a French lawyer, he has been admitted for practice to the Empire State bar.

"I always liked baseball," he said yesterday. "At least, I did since I saw that World Series battle in '19. The Cincinnati Reds downed the Chicago White Sox then, precipitating a scandal that rocked the baseball world."

Here on a business trip to the United States, Count Chambrun rarely misses an opportunity to see a baseball game. However, business interests come first with him, and he had time to see only one series game.

In August, 1935, the Lafayette descendant married Marie Jose Laval, whose father, Pierre Laval, was then Premier of France. Under French and American law the bride takes the nationality of her husband, hence both now are citizens of France and the United States.

Well known on two continents through her literary work, the countess often accompanied her father, before her marriage, on diplomatic journeys as his secretary. She first visited the United States in 1931, when her father conferred with President Hoover.

George F. Muth Suicide; Motive Lacking in Case

Business Man Found Hanging in Store; Poison Smeared on Face.

Although admittedly puzzled by the apparent lack of motive, Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald last night issued a certificate of suicide in the death of Edward E. Muth, 59-year-old president of the George F. Muth artist supply company at 710 Thirteenth street northwest.

With a heavy rope around his neck and a half-empty poison bottle by his side, Muth was found yesterday hanging from a skylight beam in a second-floor supply room of the store. The discovery was made by Robert Platt, an employe of the company, shortly before 8 a. m.

The elderly store president, police said, apparently had fashioned the death noose from a length of cord taken from a packing box in the room. A stepladder stood beside the dangling body and the poison bottle was overturned on the packing case nearby, Platt told investigators. Policeman George Weaver, of the First Precinct, who cut the body down, said Muth's face was smeared with the bottle's poison contents.

Arrived at Store Early.

Muth arrived at the store unusually early yesterday, explaining when he left home that he wanted to finish an important piece of work. When Platt reported as usual to open the story he went to the second floor for supplies and discovered the tragedy.

Absence of a note or any explanation for the act puzzled police and members of the family. It was reported, however, that Muth had been in ill health for some time and was under the care of a physician. He also had been worrying over the illness of a member of his firm, friends reported.

George Muth, son of the dead man, could offer no reason for the apparent suicide. Although his father had been under a physician's care, his condition was in no way considered serious, the younger Muth declared. Finances of the store are in excellent shape, he added.

Muth had been head of the firm which bore his father's name for 15 years. The store, dealing in artists' supplies, paints and draftsmen's equipment, was established 55 years ago.

Talented Musician, Actor.

A talented playwright, musician and actor, Muth had been actively connected with local amateur theatricals for many years. He was a member of the Arts Club and took part in nearly all of its functions, including the annual Bal Boheme.

He wrote a number of plays and annually staged productions at the National Park Seminary at Forest Glen. His dramas were mainly musical. He, himself, composed the scores and often played with the orchestras as a pianist.

In the days when minstrel shows were popular, Muth was much in demand to stage productions for local amateur groups. During the war, as a member of the War Camp Community Service, he presented plays for the entertainment of soldiers.

A native Washingtonian, Muth was a member of the Board of Trade, Optimist Club, Washington-Centennial Lodge of Masons and St. Paul's Lutheran Church. He lived at 1426 Decatur street northwest.

Besides his son, Muth is survived by his widow, Mrs. Edna E. Muth, and two daughters, Mrs. Leed D. Latimer, jr., and Miss Flora E. Muth.

Funeral services will be held tomorrow at 2 p. m. at Lee's funeral home, Fourth street and Massachusetts avenue northeast. Burial will be in Oak Hill Cemetery.

EDWARD E. MUTH.

Judge Is Released On Personal Bond In Traffic Offense

Police Court Judge Edward M. Curran, who has a reputation of being lenient with minor traffic regulation violators, was released on his personal bond "not to repeat the offense" of parking illegally.

The judge had parked abreast on Connecticut avenue near McKinley street northwest while his wife went to a shop to make some purchase.

Policeman H. L. Garner, of the Eighth Precinct, rode up on his motorcycle and told Judge Curran to move on. The judge is alleged to have said "I am waiting for my wife. She will only be a minute."

"You better come with me to the station house," Policeman Garner said. At Eighth Precinct Station attaches greeted the magistrate with:

"Good morning, Judge."

Policeman Garner blinked. He stared. He began to stutter. But Judge Curran did not hold it against him and proceeded to walk from the station house without posting collateral.

"You can quote me as saying I have nothing to say," Judge Curran said later.

Dr. Hedrick, 71, Scientist, Dies At Home Here

Astronomer, Mathematician Was Former U. S. Aid; Rites Tomorrow.

Dr. Henry Benjamin Hedrick, 71, astronomer, mathematician and compiler of several mathematical tables for astronomers, died of a heart attack yesterday at his home, 3240 S street northwest.

Dr. Hedrick graduated from George Washington University, then Columbian College. Shortly after graduating he was employed at the Naval Observatory. Leaving the Naval Observatory in 1912 he went to Yale University, where he worked 10 years computing moon tables for astronomers.

While at Yale University he received a doctor of philosophy degree. During the World War he acted as an instructor in the Naval Reserve, and from 1922 until 1932 was chief ballistician at the Aberdeen, (Md.) Proving Grounds. Shortly thereafter he retired.

While computing moon tables at Yale he also published the "Catalogue of Zodiacal Stars" and several other mathematical tables for astronomers.

Dr. Hedrick was a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, American Mathematical Society and the Astronomical Society.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Hannah Mace Hedrick; a son, Judge Benjamin F. Hedrick, of Arlington County, Va., and two daughters, Miss Anna F. Hedrick, of this city, and Dr. Eleanor Hedrick Beamer, Richmond, Tex.

Funeral services will be held at 2 p. m. tomorrow at his late residence. Burial will be in Oak Hill Cemetery.

Police Mingle With Gamblers Before Arrests

Raiders Watch Operations for 10 Minutes, Then Apprehend 11 Men.

Vice squad detectives mingled with gamblers in a racing establishment at 1403 L street northwest for nearly ten minutes yesterday before their identity or presence was noticed.

In the scurry that followed their recognition, 11 men were arrested. Two were charged with setting up a gaming table, while the others were released to appear in court as witnesses.

Those charged gave their names as Manny Kline, 41, and Sam Wolfson, 34, both of the 1200 block M street northwest. They were released in $2,000 bail.

Sergt. George Deyoe, who led the raid, said his men drove to the place and were recognized by a lookout man. He fled. The officers entered the establishment and stood around for several minutes watching bets being placed and listening to a telephone amplifier announces the results of races.

One participant in the alleged play noticed Deyoe carried an iron bar—brought in case their entrance had been barred—and the alarm was spread. Alleged racing slips and the amplifier were confiscated. Police said $72.95 was found in the place. Count of the slips showed a daily play estimated at nearly $1,000.

Ekins Leading By 3,000 Miles In World Flight

Writer Speeds for Burma; Two Others to Leave for Bagdad.

By the United Press.

Jodhpur, India (Wednesday), Oct. 7.—Shooting into a 3,000-mile lead in a tri-cornered race around the world, H. R. Ekins, flying reporter, sped toward Rangoon, Burma, today.

The staff writer of the New York World Telegram and other Scripps-Howard newspapers took off from Jodhpur Airport aboard a KLM-Royal Dutch airliner at 4:34 a. m. (6:04 p. m. Eastern standard time) Monday. Ekins hope to arrive in Rangoon before 6 p. m. for an overnight stop.

Almost 3,000 miles behind in Alexandria were Dorothy Kilgallen, of the New York Journal-International News Service, and Leo Kieran, of the New York Times-NANA Service. They were to leave for Bagdad aboard a British Imperial airways biplane far behind schedule.

The racers were speeding to reach Manila by October 16, when the Pan-American Airways China Clipper takes off for San Francisco. Ekins, who will have covered 11,482 miles since leaving Lakehurst, N. J., September 30, when he arrives in Rangoon, seemed certain to catch the plane.

Radio Interests War Over Plea For Power Gain

Proposal for 500,000-Watt Stations Is Opposed at F. C. C. Hearing.

By the Associated Press.

A battle between rival radio interests over proposals to increase the maximum power of big broadcasting stations from 50,000 to 500,000 watts opened before the Communications Commission yesterday amid forecasts of the eventual use of 1,000,000 watts.

Pleas for higher power were made by a group of stations now operating on "clean channels." They contended the 500,000 watts would give them a Nation-wide range.

C. B. S. Balks.

First opposition came from the Columbia System, one of the large units, which contended the change would "make the big fellow still stronger, and the little fellow weaker." Regional stations were expected to join the opposition today.

The initial plea for higher power came from a group of stations about, half of which are owned by newspapers.

Edwin W. Craig, of Nashville, Tenn., in a statement, declared some cities and regions are able to support 500,000-watt stations immediately and "with present trend toward prosperity, others may be expected to acquire this ability in the very near future."

Questioned by A. M. Craven, commission chief engineer, Caldwell said the power proposed for clear channels would give any station in the group an uninterrupted Nation-wide range at night.

Scouts Complications.

He dismissed possibility of international complications by saying a directional antennae pointed inland from coastal stations would prevent interference with foreign broadcasters.

William S. Paley, president of the Columbia System, led opposition to superpower broadcasting.

While asserting superpower had "dangerous implications" for many independent and smaller broadcasters, Paley said his system could effectively use higher power and would apply for its full quota should the commission admit it to broadcasting.

Hawaiian Jurist, 82, to Seek Admittance to U. S. High Court

Judge Monsarrat, Oldest Living American Born in Islands, to Renew Friendship With Justice Brandeis, Classmate at Harvard.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 6.—The gray and white freighter Steel Traveler eased into a berth on the Brooklyn waterfront today, and down the gangplant strode Judge Monsarrat—James Melville Monsarrat, sir, 82 years old—to see the sights.

With narrowed eye the judge, the oldest living American born in Hawaii, surveyed his surroundings, announced he had come to the United States to ask the Supreme Court for permission to practice before it, and promptly began looking over New York.

"Now," observed the judge, settling himself into a taxicab, "what about all this new night life I've been hearing about?"

A classmate of Justice Louis Brandeis at Harvard, the judge in his lifetime has been a citizen of the Kingdom of Hawaii, of the Republic of Hawaii and of the Territory of Hawaii. He has known Hawaiian royalty, including the poker-playing King Kalakana and the music-loving and determined Queen Liliuokalani.

A lot of stories preceded him to the United States. Once he was the Beau Brummell of Honolulu, wasn't he?

"Oh, well," said the judge.

"Do you suppose," he asked, "they would bar me from practice before the Supreme Court if I went to a night club?"

Next week he is going to Washington to appear before the court and see Justice Brandeis. It was back in 1878, the year of his graduation from Harvard, that the judge last saw Brandeis.

"More the honor of the thing than anything else," he said of the Supreme Court business. "You know."

Once he was a magistrate in Honolulu for six years. But since 1879, almost continuously he has practiced law there. Now he is one of the examiners of titles for the land court. In 1878 and 1879 he lived in New York, but didn't like it.

FianceVows toFind Sweetheart's Killer

Covington, Ky., Oct. 6 (AP).—The grief-stricken fiance of Miss Frances Marie Brady, 37, pledged his life's efforts today to a solution of her mysterious slaying and posted a $500 reward for apprehension of the killer.

"My whole ambition in life from now will be to solve this dastardly crime," said John J. O'Donnell, railroad passenger agent, as he conferred with his attorney preparatory to appearing before a coroner's inquest tomorrow.

Miss Brady was shot down when she stepped into her home about 1 a. m., Friday. Her sisters, Miss Elsaline and Margaret Brady, were horror-stricken as Frances staggered across the porch and fell on the lawn. They said they saw a shadowy figure flee toward the rear of the house, evidently escaping through the rear door, which police found unlocked.

County commissioners also offered a $500 reward, while City Manager Theodore Kluemper said he would ask city commissioners, after the inquest, to post a like amount.

U.S. Contracts Director Warns On Compliance

Evaders Liable to Anti-Trust Action, Asserts Chairman Healy.

By the Associated Press.

A warning that concerted action by employers to evade labor provisions of the Walsh-Healey Government contracts act would "run them foul of the antitrust laws" was given yesterday by the chairman of a newly created Public Contracts Board.

The board was appointed by Secretary Perkins earlier in the day to regulate labor conditions under the act of firms handling approximately $380,000,000 in contracts for Government materials.

The law, by Senator Walsh and Representative Healey, Massachusetts Democrats, requires holders of certain Government contracts in excess of $10,000 to maintain prevailing wage rates, pay overtime for employment beyond eight hours a day or 40 hours a week, and employ no workers under 16.

Institute Plea Heard.

A few hours after its creation, the Contracts Board opened hearings to consider a request from the Cotton Textile Institute for exemption of cotton textile manufacturers for 90 days from the 16-year-age minimum for girl workers and the eight-hour day for certain other groups of workers.

Frederick W. Morrison, counsel for the institute, told the board manufacturers might evade the act by selling their goods to dealers, who could contract with the Government and be the only ones required to comply.

Questioned by Thomas F. McMahon, president of the United Textile Workers, who opposed blanket approval of the textile exemptions, Chairman Frank Healy of the board asserted:

"It might be possible to defeat the purpose of the act through concerted action by the employes of a given industry, but that would run them foul of the antitrust laws."

Dr. Claudius T. Murchison, of the Textile Institute, urged that regulations under the act be designed to encourage compliance. Otherwise, he told reporters after the hearing, the act "instead of reaching its objective might prove the greatest obstacle to the maintenance of decent standards."

The board took the institute's request under advisement.

Announcing the appointment of the board on a temporary basis, Secretary Perkins said its members were Labor Department officials because Congress had appropriated no funds to pay them. Chairman Healy is former head of the Government contracts division of the NRA. The other members are Hugh L. Kerwin, director of conciliation, and Telfair Knight, counsel for the textile labor relations division.

JapanDemands Chinese Free 5 'Buffer' States

Denies Protectorate Plan as National Leaders Seek to Avert War.

Nanking, Oct. 6 (AP).—A Japanese demand for virtual independence of five North China provinces as a "special zone between China and Manchukuo" was revealed by the Japanese Embassy here tonight.

The Japanese spokesman said Japan did not particularly want a protectorate over the proposed area, but stated the Tokyo government felt there must be a "cushion" of some sort between Manchukuo and China.

Both sides in the tangled dispute over Sino-Japanese affairs, growing out of Japanese claims of alleged anti-Japanese "terrorism" in China, admitted tonight the situation was precarious.

Parley Planned.

"Anything can happen," it was said, as Dictator Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek and Ambassador Shigeru Kawagoe of Japan, prepared to meet in a series of conferences in an attempt to alleviate the growing crisis.

Talk in both Japanese and Chinese official circles indicated the affairs of the two nations were rapidly approaching a climax.

Chinese circles were emphatic in the opinion that any Japanese pressure at present would "without doubt be met by military resistance."

Crisis Near.

Military commentators said China was prepared to sustain a military campaign "only six months," but maintained the nation was ready to stake everything on the present crisis.

Talk of hostilities was in the air more than at any time previously.

Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek summoned Chinese government officials to a conference, presiding at the first cabinet meeting held in two months, and later reviewed a gigantic military parade in the drill grounds outside Nanking.

Two Deny Guilt In Antiques Theft

William Carroll Price, 18 and his father, William Anderson Price, 49, pleaded not guilty yesterday in Police Court to a charge of grand larceny growing out of the alleged theft of many thousand dollars worth of antiques from the home of Mrs. Arthur MacArthur.

The youth and his father were ordered held under $5,000 bond for the grand jury by Judge Walter J. Casey.

The defendants were arrested Saturday and Sunday by detectives when Mrs. MacArthur identified several of her antiques—Chinese curios and historical heirlooms—in an antique shop when she returned from a visit with her brother, Gen. Douglas MacArthur, military adviser to the Philippine Commonwealth.

Thomas Gonzales, operator of an antique shop, testified yesterday the youth had sold him a large number of articles identified by Mrs. MacArthur as those stolen from a second-floor closet of her home at 1854 Klarorama road northwest. Mrs. MacArthur told the court the Price family had leased her home during her stay in the Philippines.

Million-Dollar Eyeglass Fraud Exposed by U.S.

Ring of Fake Specialists Mulcting Aged of Savings Broken Up.

fited and had been deprived of their last dollar.

The fakers traveled by automobile, in each case pledging their victims to secrecy on the pretense that the "great" doctor would be ruined professionally should it be known he had performed an operation at a private residence.

Methods used in the racket were revealed as follows:

"Finger men" traveled about the country selling eyeglasses of cheap make for exorbitant prices. In one case, a man 98 years old was induced to pay $100 for glasses which it was claimed would improve his sight.

A few weeks later, the same imposter sold the man another pair of glasses for $135, explaining the first ones were not strong enough for his age. It was shown later by an optician that the victim had a cataract on each eye and the glasses could be of no possible benefit. The glasses were worth not more than $3.75.

Specialists Stepped In.

But the finger men, it was learned, were not satisfied with the enormous profits. They furnished names and addresses of their victims to members of the gang known as "specialists." From any amounts the specialists obtained, the finger men received 20 per cent.

The fake specialists usually worked in pairs as follows:

Arriving at the home of a victim, one remains in the car. The other introduces himself under the name of a nationally-known physician. He states he is merely passing through, checking on glasses sold by his optical house. Thus he gains a chance to examine the victim's eyes.

He pretends to be worried over the case and finally tells the victim there "is something wrong" and he would like to have the advice of an "eminent eye specialist who is waiting in the car."

The specialist makes another examination, then announces:

"No wonder you cannot fit glasses to his eye. It is in very bad condition. There is a 'cancerette' on it. Unless it is removed very shortly, it will either go to the brain and result in death, or paralysis will follow."

Persuaded to "Operate."

His confederate asks:

"What would be the cost of such an operation, doctor?"

The specialist says:

"The cost would range anywhere from $2,500 up to $5,000 or more, dependent upon the clinic or hospital to which the patient is taken."

"Doctor, why don't you just operate here?" the confederate asks. "These people cannot afford to go to a hospital. Why couldn't you just go right ahead and perform it here and now, or couldn't you do it here?"

The fake doctor replies:

"Oh, yes! I could perform it here just as well as anywhere but I may not do so. It would be unethical to perform it anywhere except in my office or some clinic or hospital."

When the fake doctor goes to his car to get leaflets containing data on such operations, the confederate says:

"That is one of the best oculists in the country today. He's very wealthy and does not need money. I know the only thing he is afraid of is that you folks might talk about the matter. If you can convince him that you'll not talk about it, I'm sure he'll do the operation for you and can save you several thousand dollars."

D. C. Models Organize a League To Set Up Uniform Price Scale

Funds Depleted, New Organization Will Fight the "Occasional Mannequin;' Book Describing Each Girl to Be Distributed to Drummers.

Fifty beautiful, chattering girls, most of them former debutantes, gathered in the Garbo room of the Shoreham last night to organize.

They formed the Washington League of Models — "excellent mannequins to display your merchandise in Washington and Baltimore," according to their announcement card.

In the future those who model will not have to worry about amateur competition. In the past, they said, their funds have been a bit depleted because many a local beauty could be tempted easily to model for a day or two just because she liked clothes or wanted to see her picture in the paper.

From now on things are going to be different.

As Peggy De Moll, organizer and president, said:

"There is to be a regular scale of prices, which all of you will receive. Girls who do not work for union prices will be ruled out. The reinstatement fee will be $5, which will go toward advertising the league."

"In the past there has not been much modeling done in Washington," Miss De Moll explained. The drummers from the New York shops have often been frantic because they could not get the right kind of girls to show off their coats, hats and dresses. Sometimes they bring down their own models. We hope to change all that."

The league will publish a book to show every visiting drummer. It will contain a full-face picture of every girl, a record of her experience, what hours she can work, and such details as color of hair, height, weight, hip and bust measurements and size of hat, shoes and gloves.

"The drummers can easily tell from these descriptions which girl they want," Miss De Moll explained. "They don't need a full-length picture. A quick glance at the measurements and they can visualize the figure."

Mrs. Edmund H. Lloyd, the former Mary Jane Brahany, was elected secretary of the new organization. Mrs. Samuel C. Pullman will be treasurer.

La Rocque Star Wanes as Aids Fight on Policy

Followers Desert French Rightist Head; End of Power Predicted.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Oct. 6.—The star of Col. Francois de la Rocque, head of the Social Party and chief of the dissolved Croix de Feu, war veteran-fascist organization, was clouded tonight by dissension among his followers and the government's decision not to make a "martyr" of him through criminal prosecution.

De la Rocque, who not so long ago gained serious recognition as a potential dictator of France, tonight found his Rightest followers turning from him because they contended he had shown weakness in not causing more trouble in his anti-Communist demonstration Sunday, and because he had not outfought the government's suppression campaign against the Social Party.

His highest leaders would not concede that the organization's membership was declining, but several prominent Rightist adherents of De la Rocque said privately they believed there might soon be agitation for a new party leader.

Jean Chiappe, former prefect of Paris police, was named by many as the most likely successor to De la Rocque should the latter be ousted as party chieftain.

Boston's Police Find New Clews In 'Legs Killing'

White Bag, Stained Sheets, Glove Uncovered as Hunt Is Widened.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Oct. 6.—Upon a half-dozen clews police tonight pinned their hopes for solution of what appeared to be a gruesome slaying, uncovered with discovery of a woman's legs in the murky waters of Boston Harbor.

Hacked off above the thighs, the legs—each wrapped in a burlap bag and newspaper—were found yesterday, the first by four WPA workers, the second by a retired boilermaker four hours later and a quarter of a mile away.

A search precipitated by their discovery along the rocky shores of the harbor's many islands and through its twisting channels was rewarded today.

An attendant at the Deer Island House of Correction found a surgeon's glove, its thumb cut off and deeply stained, on a beach a mile from the spot where the legs were found.

Civilians Join Hunt.

Civilians and prisoners from the House of Correction joined police and Coast Guardsmen in the hunt.

Not far from that spot searchers found a stained sheet of the type, police reported, used in hospitals for abdominal operations. Split in the center, it was hemmed so that a patient's body could be covered from the chin to the spot being operated upon.

Earlier today a white bag, fashioned of sail-cloth material, was found. It contained internal organs.

The white bag, the stained sheet, the thumbless glove, the burlap bags, the newspapers and the legs were, Police Capt. William Donovan said, the only clews.

From Medical Examiner William J. Brickley came a tentative description of the victim.

An X-ray examination of the bone structure of her legs, he said, indicated that she was about 25 to 35 years old.

From the length of the legs, he decided she was 5 feet 2 or 3 inches tall and well developed. He said hair on the legs showed she was a brunette.

With the medical examiner's tentative description to work upon, William Ross, head of the Police Bureau of Missing Persons, began combing the files in an effort to determine if the victim had been reported missing.

Clearing House Trade Runs Into 8 Trillions

New York, Oct. 6 (AP).—Wall Street's favorite financial curiosity—the annual report of the New York Clearing House Association—was released today, showing the impressive total transactions of its 83-year-old history of $8,385,973,830,826 through the fiscal year ended October 5.

For the last year alone, the association had transactions totaling $212,753,318,850, or a daily average of $702,156,167.

The report was replete with figures trailing off across the six-page pamphlet, including results for each year since 1853.

William S. Gray, president of the Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., was elected chairman of the clearing house committee for the new fiscal period.

5,063 Enrolled For Red Cross In Day's Drive

Campaign Total Mounts to 27,252 as Good Weather Is Aid.

Enrollment in the 1936 Red Cross membership campaign continued to mount yesterday, with solicitors reporting an increase of 5,163 for the day. This places the total enrollment in the tenth day of the campaign at 27,252.

Continued good weather has aided roll-call solicitors and reports are coming in with greater regularity.

Reports yesterday from Dean Bramhall, division chairman in the Works Progress Administration, indicate approximately 50 per cent of the personnel of his group has been covered. This unit turned in 1,134 memberships last night, highest of the day. The Government Printing Office was next with 1,011, and the General Accounting Office third with 839.

The total enrollment in the seven divisions last night was: Government, 21,035; financial, 1,590; utilities, 1,297; professional, 1,189; business, 1,021; residential 369, and miscellaneous, 751.

More complete reports are expected to be forthcoming at a meeting of the roll call executive committee at 4 p. m. today in the headquarters of the District Chapter, 1730 E street. Lloyd B. Wilson, president of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., chairman of the drive, said last night all phases of his organization would be gone over in the meeting.

Dr. Thomas C. Green, chairman of the Speakers Bureau, National Red Cross, will speak today on Red Cross work at an assembly of students in Gunston Hall.

6,000 Claims Delay Fidelity Settlement

Approximately 6,000 shareholders of the Fidelity Building & Loan Association have not as yet presented their claims to the receiver's office, it was announced yesterday.

This delay, it was pointed out, is holding up completion of the receiver's investigation, and co-operation of the 6,000 shareholders was solicited yesterday to speed action.

You don't very often hear about an automobile that stops too fast for its own good, but that has been true this year of one, according to an automobile authority. The liveliness of the 1936 Buick, with its sensational pick-up, has been accompanied by an equally notable deceleration. In fact, it stops so fast that when allowed to come down suddenly from very high speed it sometimes choked itself. Engineers said it was the carburetor, but the car already had one of the finest carburetors available. So they had to get busy and work out a still better one, and so today the tip is that Buick for 1937 will

Missing The Mark.

Considerable criticism is being directed at the Public Utilities Commission for its decision permitting the use of a larger number of one-man street cars here. The Central Labor Union has gone so far as to suggest that the President ask for the resignation of members of the P. U. C. for alleged failure to serve the public interest.

Like any other governmental agency, the Public Utilities Commission may be properly criticized when and if it is negligent in its responsibility as legally defined. If such criticism is to mean anything, however, it must take into consideration the facts of the case in question and the limited powers of the commission to bring about improved utility service. It is well to remember, too, that the P. U. C. is a quasi-judicial body charged with the duty of regulating utilities in fairness to their owners as well as to the public. The duty of exclusively representing the consumers' point of view falls to the people's counsel.

Fair inquiry does not reveal that the commission had any reasonable alternative to granting the Capital Transit Co.'s request. A careful investigation showed that the company is at present "in the red." During the last few years it has paid only one dividend. Yet the company, under the law, is entitled to a fair return. If the commission had denied the requested privilege of reducing operating costs, the case might have been carried to the courts with unfortunate results for the public.

With the company in its present financial situation, the courts might even grant an increase in fares. For the law does not contemplate the confiscation of property, even in the cause of better transportation service. Criticism of the commission would be more effective if tempered by these considerations.

Critics may disagree with the policies the transit company is following. They may indorse the theory of confiscation in the interests of lower rates. Or they may advocate higher fares. But to denounce the commission for applying existing law to a given set of facts is beside the point. Before further action is taken, groups seeking better transportation service would be well advised to take cognizance of what the P. U. C. can and cannot do.

The Half-Year Trade Balance.

During the first six months of the current year the value of merchandise imports to the United States was $9,000,000 more than that of exports, on a total foreign trade turnover of $2,317,000,000. This country, however, had a favorable balance of $17,000,000 on account of service items, such as shipping charges and interest on investments abroad, resulting in a net balance in our favor of $8,000,000. This relatively trivial sum is the closest approach to a perfect trade balance since the Department of Commerce began making its reports.

Changes in the volume and value of specific imports and exports are due to innumerable causes, some easily identifiable, others defying analysis. But the tendency for imports as a whole to rise more rapidly than exports, and to reduce our favorable merchandise balance to the vanishing point, is due to a universal cause that has a compelling power over trade movements.

When the United States was piling up export surpluses, in the years before the war, it was a debtor country, selling to meet the charges on those debts. And for a time after the war, when we had become a creditor power but were still selling more goods to our debtors than we bought from them, we balanced the account by lending abroad. In other words, we financed the sale of our own goods.

As soon as we ceased to lend abroad on a large scale it became evident that we could not expect to sell large amounts of goods to foreigners unless they could make payment by selling to us. That is, our export trade had to be brought into closer balance with our import trade.

Although repeatedly warned that we must be prepared for this adjustment there is still a tendency in some quarters to be suspicious of it. So long as both our export and import trade is expanding there is no ground for alarm and no reason for complaint from a national, as distinct from a group, viewpoint.

On the other hand, recent additions to our already excessive gold supply, as a result of a capital flight from European countries, is an abnormal development having no connection with current trade transactions. That is creating difficulties for this country by further augmenting the excess reserves of our banks, and it could cause serious trouble should large amounts of foreign funds ever be suddenly recalled by their owners.

On The President's Neck.

The WPA has definitely moved into first place among the major liabilities of the Administration in the present campaign. It has been too lightly assumed that the extensive outpouring of money for work relief would give President Roosevelt a political advantage. For in its efforts to capture the relief vote the New Deal has grossly overplayed its hand. Relief-roll votes are likely to be more than offset by the indignation of millions of citizens who now recognize the WPA for the bungling failure it really is.

From the economic viewpoint, it is indefensible to maintain an immense army of jobless men on work-relief when private enterprise is actually beginning to feel the pinch of a labor shortage. Farmers were the first to complain that they could not find men to harvest their crops. Housewives brought evidence of the difficulty of obtaining domestic help. Now the Associated General Contractors of America assert that the WPA is responsible for an increasing shortage of skilled and journeymen workers, sufficient to threaten revival of the building industry. As the contractors intimate, the policy of taxing industry to create relief jobs that delay restoration of employment is simply devoid of reason.

That mistake of policy might be adjusted if the work-relief system established by the WPA were basically sound. But it is not. In every section of the country investigators find evidence of political corruption. Local bosses are in control. In spite of slaps on the wrist from Harry Hopkins, many of them continue applying the "political test" to applicants for relief. The better jobs are only too habitually awarded to politicians. The whole organization is honeycombed by favoritism, waste and inefficiency.

Realizing that a true picture of the WPA would be a serious handicap to the President in his campaign for re-election, its chieftains progressively applied the muzzle to their subordinates. But the American people are not accustomed to censorship or the concealment of information that should be public property. Our traditional procedure is free discussion of the facts, regardless of consequences. Hence, WPA's policy of concealment merely attracts attention to the deplorable mess in which it is involved.

John Stutz, Democratic director of relief in Kansas, is only one of many officials and citizens who are protesting against the high-handed "cover-up" policy. Justice William F. Bleakley, Republican candidate for Governor of New York, has pointed out that the full extent of political favoritism and excessive costs of administering work-relief cannot be ascertained until these public records are released. And Col. W. E. Hoyer, who recently exposed the padding of WPA pay rolls in New York (one list included the names of 17 dead men), has resigned in disgust because he was refused permission to continue that essential work.

Cumulative instances of this sort shatter the last vestige of confidence in the WPA. And that organization has no effective defense. Apparently, the best Mr. Hopkins can do is to assert that he is protecting his organization against individuals who seek to exploit relief workers, keeping pitifully silent about their exposure to the exploitation of the local bosses.

For his own protection, therefore, President Roosevelt may find it necessary to begin overhauling the WPA even before election. He cannot begin that task too soon. For regardless of who is elected, the work-relief system will have to be drastically reformed if a national scandal is to be averted.

The Buoyancy Of Truth.

In the letter columns on this page yesterday was printed a communication from the secretary of an organization with a title which casts a good deal of incidental light upon the enduring difficulties of mankind. The organization is the "Society for Correct Civil War Information."

More than 70 years after the close of that bitter contest, need for a society to refute false statements about the struggle is still felt. Of the actual participants in the Civil War only a dwindling handful of feeble nonagenarians remains. But combat over issues and episodes therein endures unto the second and third generations.

"Truth crushed to earth shall rise again," wrote Bryant, hastening to add that this is because "the eternal year of God are hers." As the "Society for Correct Civil War Information" testifies by its mere existence, a goodly number of years may be necessary to release those buoyant qualities.

Perhaps it would be helpful to the cause of truth to establish societies of this nature as a matter of course, whenever some acute issue arises to stir sharp divisions of opinion, and consequent intentional or unintentional misstatements by partisan devotees.

Perhaps it would be a good idea to establish now a "Society for Correct Information on the Presidential Campaign of 1936," with an endowment to carry it through the full century which would very likely be necessary to complete its work.

Without showing undue haste, however, such a society might fairly promptly bring in a report on an editorial in another Washington newspaper yesterday which asserted that "Secretary Hull has in a series of 'most-favored nation' trade treaties politely offered to take all the goods Europe and Asia can produce. . . ."

It should not take long to set the record straight on so gross and seemingly deliberate a misstatement as that.

Modern Condottieri.

Events that took place in Paris and London over the week-end serve to call attention once again to one of the most astonishing phenomenon of our times—the rise of private armies serving as the pretorian guard of would-be dictators.

In France the lesson plainly to be derived from the experience of Italy, Germany and Austria is at last being learned. Effective steps are being taken to curb the Croix de Feu and similar military and quasi-military organizations that have sought to establish themselves as a state within the state. These organizations are to be allowed to exist only if they abandon violent tactics and become purely political in their nature. And a similar healthy point of view is developing in Great Britain.

There, until last Sunday, it was complacently believed that Sir Oswald Mosley is only a harmless posturer. But when the Blackshirts, in a deliberate effort to provoke trouble, decided to invade the East End of London, it took the utmost efforts of the police to prevent a very bloody clash. Now it seems that British tolerance of political eccentricity is to be withdrawn from a type of organization not seen on British soil since the days of the Wars of the Roses.

Like so many other outward manifestations of fascism as a political movement, the idea of a private army was taken over by would-be Mussolinis from Italy. Without his squadristi and his Blackshirt militia, Mussolini would probably have remained only an agitator. With them at his beck and call, the march on Rome was made possible.

In Germany in the days of the Weimar republic there were actually no fewer than four private armies roaming the land. There was the Stalhelm, a conservative organization of war veterans; the Reichsbanner, which was friendly to the republic; the Red Front Fighters, who constituted the military arm of the Communist Party, and the Nazi S. A. (Sturn-Abteilung), which did Hitler's bidding. These organizations the government tolerated in greater or lesser degree, to its own ultimate undoing.

In Austria under the republic intermittent fighting went on for years between Starhemberg's private army, the Heimwehr, and the Socialist Defense Corps. Now the Heimwehr is steadily being shorn of its power, the government apparently intending to depend for its support on the regular army which it is expanding through conscription.

It is clearly suicidal for democratic nations to tolerate the establishment within their borders of similar organizations, whose existence can only lead to the creation of rival bodies and sooner or later to serious civil disturbance. Such private armies are a throwback to the days of the Condottieri and have no place in our times.

Pitcairn Island Again.

When Fletcher Christian dropped Capt. Bligh off the good ship Bounty, a good way from here in terms of both time and space, we can be quite certain that he thought nothing about the effects of this peremptory action on the then new-born United States. Yet these effects roll up, and yesterday were taken under official cognizance by no less an agency than the Department of State.

On the merits of the shattering controversy between Bligh and Christian the Administration, in accord with the presumable desire of Congress, has so far preserved successful neutrality. Whether it can do so much longer is perhaps dubious.

To offset the movie picturization of Capt. Bligh as a brutal martinet no less a person than Laurence Irving, son of the famous Henry Irving, has just produced evidence which strongly turn the tables against Christian. The latter, it is argued at length, was hopelessly smitten by the pulchritudinous charms of the South Sea maidens. In order to be a lotus eater he had to rid the Bounty of its pure but puritanical skipper, which was done with more celerity than courtesy.

Of course the whole world now knows how Christian, with an assorted bevy of tarry seamen and Tahitian sirens, proceeded to uninhabited Pitcairn Island, there to establish a colony which, in spite of highly questionable origins, flourishes to this day. What the world has still to realize is the way in which Uncle Sam is getting mixed up in this eighteenth century scandal.

But the entanglement is now part of the record. Yesterday the Department of State, discreetly but definitely, announced the issuance of a license for the export of $46 worth of rifles and $8 worth of cartridges to Pitcairn Island. The purpose of this shipment is veiled by intriguing silence.

We would not seek to pierce that veil. But, if Secretary Hull will permit the observation, the need of the present Pitcairn Islanders for licenses to shoot is probably a good deal less than that of their ancestors for licenses to wed.

The railroads materially reduced passenger rates, but they speeded their trains up so much that they use your money up just as fast as ever.

The Forgotten Issue.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A prominent radio commentator recently said that at the Democratic National Convention Roosevelt men were seeking every possible claim for his re-election, but not a word was said about the one pre-election promise he had kept out of all those he had made—his promise for repeal.

This was accomplished by political pressure brought to bear on States for repeal of their prohibition laws.

Not once so far in campaign speeches over the radio or in press reports of these speeches has Roosevelt or his followers mentioned his having brought about repeal as he promised, or what a blessing it has been to the country, or what a large amount of money it has brought into the Treasury—he promised it would—or how much it has cost the Government in attempts to run down bootleggers and illicit stills, or for drunken arrests with court trials and imprisonments, or about the slaughter of our people by sober-drunk drivers, or the cost to the taxpayer for hospital care of the poor maimed in these accidents.

Neither do they proclaim the splendid achievement of the Administration in increasing the sales of beer to young boys, girls and women by making it fashionable and popular by serving it to them at the White House.

None of the wonderful blessings of repeal are proclaimed to the voters by the Administration speakers. They do not give President Roosevelt the credit he deserves for bringing all this about!

Speaking Of Revolt.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: When Mr. Roosevelt, of the Hyde Park Roosevelts, says he stopped a revolt in 1933 we are amazed at his conservatism. What a shame we didn't have a chap like him around at the time of the Civil War.

Of course it is the prerogative of a New Dealer to make the preposterous seem reasonable, just as it is the rule in sweet politics to saddle your own shortcomings upon the previous Administration.

Mr. Roosevelt fails to record the revolts he started. The first was directed against his party's platform and his campaign promises. Perhaps, in extenuation, that was before discovery of human rights, human credits versus Government deficits, industrial royalists and temples replete with money changers.

It's now clear Roosevelt has started another revolt. Its effect on such lifelong Democrats as myself has been to change us into Republicans for the period of the present emergency.

When this revolt is over nothing will remain of the New Deal except the obligation to cart away the carcass and recreate the Democratic Party. I. H. LATIMER.

Photographers' Opportunity.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Every Sunday I read in your paper the alleged straw vote of the Institute of Public Opinion.

I have been through a great many States this summer and fall and after a most careful inquiry I fail to find a single human being who has received a ballot from the Institute of Public Opinion or who has been interviewed by one of its investigators.

I would like to see some person who has received a ballot from the Institute of Public Opinion. If there is such a person I would like him to call at my office and give me his picture, for I want to hang it up in my office.

Unless I can get proof that this organization is really taking a poll I must conclude that the alleged poll of the Institute of Public Opinion is wholly unreliable and is simply propaganda for the Farley-New Deal party.

'Praise With A Faint Damn.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: For several months I have very carefully followed your editorial comments on New Deal policies and campaign tendencies. I have likewise observed your editorial observations of the Republican platform and the Republican candidate.

There is an old saying that you can damn a person with faint praise. In your recent editorial commenting on several of Mr. Landon's inopportune remarks, and conclusions made with only half the truth at hand, I have decided that one can reverse the order and praise with a faint damn. This I think you have done in your candid criticism of certain Landon statements.

"Away From Democracy."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Of incalculable consequence to every citizen of our fair land is the result of November's election. Not merely will the present generation experience the effect, but the future greatness of our country is to be considered. Throughout the entire world America is known as a country where opportunities abound and the home of a liberty-loving, happy people. It is the privilege of the electorate to continue these conditions and for the very reason that we are a world power, our success as a constitutional democracy is not only important to us, but may prove a factor in influencing other nations. Europe has a Stalin, a Hitler, a Mussolini. We should profit thereby.

The trend of legislation in our Government indicates that this Administration has brought us to the brink of surrendering our right of self-government. If Mr. Roosevelt is elected the trend is certain to continue, for we are traveling the road that leads away from democracy. The President is regarded as being politically minded and a shrewd politician. However, an increasing number of our citizens do not applaud his method.

In accepting a second nomination for the Presidency, Mr. Roosevelt declared for centralization of power in Washington, and his cleverly worded platform appeared to please the leftist.

The contest between the two major parties will be earnestly contested and it may happen that Democrats who are critical of the President's policies may decide the coming election. Also, Jeffersonian Democrats are organizing for the purpose of supporting Gov. Landon, conscientiously believing that their decision is in the interest of the people.

In exercising the right of suffrage, let us honor American tradition and reverently cling to the fundamental principles upon which our forefathers builded a nation to glorify the achievement of man and bequeathed to posterity a priceless heritage. WALTER P. PRIEST.

The Greater Evil.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: When one considers the fallacies of Washington's automobile traffic problems the question is who is to blame? The police and driving public alike.

In front of the New Willard Hotel on October 3, there were three automobiles bearing license plates of Pennsylvania, Ohio and New York, all with tickets for traffic parking violations. The owners of these cars were patronizing Washington hotels, restaurants or theaters, etc., and spending dollars and not nickels. Why should they be penalized or embarrassed for having no knowledge of local parking laws? These three auto owners are in no sense of the word violators of traffic laws or endangering anyone's life or limb.

Two blocks west of the New Willard is the White House and on the south boundary is a wide curved street. At 8:30 a. m. this street resembles an auto race course as practically all the natives are rushing to work at excessive speed. Why don't the police stop this and give a pedestrian a chance to cross the street?

Why can't the Washington police catch up with local speeders instead of frightening out-of-town auto owners away and give tickets to fast cars instead of parked ones?

The Breathing Spell.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: You know, I know and everyone should know that the present pick-up in employment and exchange of commodities is due to the absence of Congress and the breathing spell promised by the President.

Its continuation, however, is contingent upon further noninterference with business, which is trying to show what it can do if given the opportunity. How long will the opportunity last? That is the question. You tell them.

All Out Of Step But The Socialists.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In his recent letter to The Post Mr. J. D. Mason made a lot of fuss about the Maine election. Most everyone expected Maine to go Republican by a 2 to 1 vote, and were surprised that the G. O. P. majority was so small! Mr. Mason should remember that Maine is the strongest G. O. P. State in all the Union, barring none.

He should look farther West than Maine. California decided the 1916 election, not Maine, nor New York nor Pennsylvania. And California today has a Democratic Party registration that exceeds the Republican by about 400,000. Yet California used to vote G. O. P. by 2½ to 1.

Mr. Mason is opposed to the New Deal and all its works, and to every policy of the Democratic Administration. Yet his favorite candidate, Mr. Landon, has admitted that he himself and his party favors much of the Administration's program! Are both parties swinging to the "left," Mr. Mason? It would seem so. The Liberty League will lose whoever wins, and the common people also will lose whichever party wins, as they have always done before.

Wouldn't it be better if Mr. Mason advised his candidate not to flirt too much with these New Dealers, as heretofore indicated? Mr. Landon was against States' rights four years ago, he was for the New Deal principles, and apparently favors most of them yet. So what is all this noise about? What difference does it make whether Mr. New Dealer Roosevelt is elected, or Mr. New Deal Landon? No difference to the average man. They are just "kidding us along" as usual. And how we love to be fooled! We always come back for more. Barnum was right.

Socialists have the only logical, constructive and possible program which can be realized. But the "free press" of the Nation is free only for the capitalistic parties. Socialists are lucky to be allowed in the news columns of our big papers three times in a campaign! And then they usually are attended to on pages 13 to 36, and in small type. Why? Because they are right!

It is right to be a "leftist." It is wrong to be a "rightist." But capitalistic papers, being fundamentally wrong, dare not give equality to all parties because then the people generally would find them out! Freedom of the press? For whom? For the 10 per cent, for the ruling class. Rip Van Winkle did not sleep as long as our citizens have slept on their rights. No wonder "democracy" is in danger the world over.

Frere Jacques

This is an article by Max Werner, translated from the "Neue Weltbuhne" of Prague, and published in "The Living Age."

COUNTER OFFENSIVE! De La Roque is attempting to build up a political party to replace his dissolved Croix de Feu. Street riots in Paris and Marseilles! When the chamber was on the point of refusing to seat him, Chiappe delivered a provocative speech. And then there is Doriot.

Jacques Doriot, renegade Communist and Mayor of Saint-Denis, has founded a Fascist party, the "French People's Party." The Rightist press applauds.

At the party's founding Doriot delivered a four-hour speech against Marxism and the class struggle and in favor of a "national community."

* * * *

In defeat, French Fascism, until now super-reactionary, bourgeois, and feudal-aristocratic, needs a popular note. Doriot is a former metal worker, a former Communist Party leader. Is that enough? Will he be able to give new impetus to French Fascism? He is a parliamentarian, tending more toward intrigue than toward brutal struggle for the masses and for power.

Doriot has found his way to Fascism through foreign policy, through a campaign of incitement against the Soviet Union. He favors an alliance between Germany and Italy, and opposes the Franco-Soviet pact; he is, as it were, a mild Fascist, with whom foreign policy comes first.

* * * *

Laval, the political godfather of this renegade, ordered the Paris police not to interfere with Doriot's fight against the Communists. Laval is Mayor of Aubervilliers, the neighboring community to Saint-Denis, where Doriot reigns. Foulon, Laval's deputy in the city hall, is liaison officer between the two. In the districts immediately north of Paris a clique of Rightist-bourgeois politicians close to Laval has usurped the municipal offices. Grisoni, Mayor of Courbevoie, a former radical, is Laval's personal friend; former Senator Billier, who is in charge of the notorious finance committee for the Rightist election campaign, holds office in Asnieres. Undoubtedly Doriot leans upon this group, with which he has been cooperating for several months. His intimate friendship with Laval decides Doriot's course in foreign policy. And Laval is still the white hope of Berlin, which is eagerly awaiting his return to active politics.

* * * *

If one observes them from this angle, Doriot's new associates do not look as harmless as they seem at first sight. Bertrand de Jouvenel is the French journalist who accepted Hitler's famous interview for the Paris-Midi before the ratification of the Franco-Soviet pact; he has connections with pro-German groups in the former Young Radicals, among whom the best-known is Jean Luchaire, editor of the pro-Hitler Notre Temps. Paul Marion is editor of the Quotidien, a paper owned by Jean Hennessy, the cognac distiller, which is conducting a bitter fight against the Franco-Soviet pact.

Hennessy has vague plans about domestic politics; he is the founder of the National Social Party, which exists on paper only; his millions will most certainly be used to aid Doriot. Bertrand de Jouvenel and Paul Marion have in recent years been regarded as representatives of thoughtful, intellectual youth, developing social and national ideas. Both were Neo-Socialist candidates in the last chamber elections; Marion in Paris, de Jouvenel in Bordeaux. Now they have landed in the camp of an adventurer and of grafting representatives of big business. As a result of Doriot's enterprise, Hitler's French policy has become potentially powerful enough to form a party.

As far as French domestic policy is concerned, Doriot will reply on his connections with Pierre Dominique and Emile Roche, who at the moment are leading an anti-Communist campaign in the Republique. They plan to alienate the radicals, especially their Moderate wing, from the Communists, and at the same time to blast the Communists out of the Popular Front. That would be an immense gain for many circles, both in domestic and in foreign policy, for the Communists are, next to Herriot, the most decisively opposed to the Third Reich.

In a Paris restaurant a meeting recently took place between Doriot, Foulon, Pierre Dominique, Emile Roche and a representative of the big insurance companies. There was also present a "gentleman with several sabel scars and a decidedly Pomeranian accent," who was keenly interested in French politics. They discussed a schism in the Radical Party, and called for the support of the bourgeois groups, up until now devoted to de La Roque. The gentleman with the scars is believed to have told Doriot and Roche that they could count on him. Setting, purpose, and backer are obvious: the Third Reich needs a faithful ally.

The Saga of Rubber

By Barnet Nover

THIS is not one book, but a dozen; not a story, but a saga. On a canvas which stretches across five continents and as many centuries, the authors have painted a crowded and fascinating picture of the conquest of that vast empire of rubber. And they have done so with such charm and gusto, with such attention to detail and such thorough documentation as to make their work indispensable not only to those who want to know something about a substance that enters in a thousand ways into the fabric of our daily lives but also to all those who would know the price the world has had to pay for the civilization we enjoy.

It is a harrowing as well as an exciting story; one that is, as the authors abundantly prove, far more of a tragedy than a romance. An incredible amount of misery resulted to untold individuals as a result of the discovery by white nations of the fact that hevea brasiliensis, which the inhabitants of South American jungles learned to use centuries ago, also has its use for civilized man.

• • • •

FROM the time of Pietro Martyre d'Anghiera, the first European to write on rubber (1511), to the time when Indian rubber products were first imported into Portugal there was a lapse of 2½ centuries. A half century later Joseph Priestley, experimenting with caoutchouc, discovered that it had the property or rubbing out pencil marks—hence the name. But as late as 1825 the exports of Para rubber amounted to no more than 30 tons. By the middle of the nineteenth century, however, the trickle had broadened into a stream and was, with the discovery of vulcanization, to become a great flood.

How that vast region of the Amazon and its tributaries, the home of wild rubber, was exploited when the demand of civilized nations for caoutchouc began to grow by leaps and bounds forms as black a page in the ghastly history of man's inhumanity to man as is to be found anywhere. While great mushroom cities grew up at Para and Manaos, loaded with the luxuries brought by steamers from Europe and America that returned laden with raw rubber, in the jungles men toiled and sweated and rotted to provide the "black gold" that was responsible for the boom. Under supervisors who were as callous a lot of cut-throats ever to be fished out of the cesspools and given authority, the rubber workers were cheated, hounded, harassed. They were a constant prey to jungle fevers and insects; were compelled to live on rotten food, the payment for which kept them in a state of bondage from which they could never extricate themselves. It was no wonder that they became "brutalized, unthinking, living for their cachaca bouts, with no aspirations, no hopes—nothing to distinguish them from the other jungle animals." The well-advertised Putumayo atrocities which cost the lives of a great many thousand Indians constituted but an episode in a story which has extremely few relieving features. They were in a class with so much else that went on in the South American jungles, where hevea was found. And they were in a class, too, with the ghastly business that for years went on under royal patronage in the Belgian Congo.

THE story of King Leopold II of the Belgians is, perhaps, better known than any other connected with the history of jungle rubber. But it loses nothing in the telling, and Messrs. Howard and Ralph Wolf have told it with the detail it deserves. As a manipulator Leopold belongs in a class by himself. Beginning with nothing, he made himself practically the sole owner of an area in Central Africa many times the size of the kingdom over which he ruled as constitutional monarch. But he was no constitutional monarch in Africa. With an utter disregard for any considerations other than the building up of his own personal fortunes, he bled the natives as he compelled them to bleed the rubber trees. Millions of them died.

"The diagnosis," say the authors, "is the same as for the Putumayo starvation, exhaustion, diseases, murder, torture and flight . . . Murder and atrocities followed the rubber production curve so that we see the crimes of the Congo steadily mounting through the 1890s to climax in a burst of horror and then subside in volume and finally disappear with Leopold and the wild rubber business." But this rising volume of indignation which blew Leopold out of his personal possession of the Congo did not blow him out of his ill-gotten gains. He kept his loot.

In contrast to the story of the exploitation of the rubber resources of the Amazon Valley and the Congo that of the development of plantation rubber in the East Indies is almost idyllic. But here, too, this book is valuable for the vivid picture it portrays of the growth of a vast industry and the international complications this development gave rise to. There is an interesting sidelight (one among very many), for instance, on Harvey Firestone's rubber concession in Liberia and on Henry Ford's efforts to provide himself with an independent supply of rubber in Brazil.

• • • •

BUT the book is not merely a description of how and where rubber came to be found and exploited. It also tells the fascinating story of the men who sought to put the coagulated latex of the hevea to modern uses. It is the story of Charles Macintosh, who, together with Derby, Chesterfield and Albert, was one of the few men who has had an article of clothing named for him; of Charles Goodyear, whose love for rubber amounted to a passion and who more than any other man was the real founder of the rubber industry in all its protean forms; of Arthur Hudson, Marks and George Oenslager and other heroes of the laboratory; and of Father Julius Arthur Nieuwland, discoverer of duprene.

The last, but by no means the least interesting part of the book, deals with the development of rubber manufacturing in the United States. It is largely the fascinating and colorful story of Akron which the authors obviously know at first hand, of the great titans of the rubber industry and their interminable struggles. And it brings the story up to the outbreak of those "sit-in" strikes which this very day are finding mention in the headlines. How thoroughly the authors prepared themselves for the gigantic task they have so admirably performed can be seen in the seven closely printed pages of references they cite. It is a pity, however, that the book lacks an index.

Labor Unions

"THIS LABOR UNION RACKET," by Edward D. Sullivan. (Hillman-Curl, $2.)

Racketeering in the unions? Perhaps—a certain amount. It occurs to some extent in almost every human institution. But to try to indict a whole movement is absurd! The conservative Edmund Burke said: "You cannot indict a whole nation." Neither can you indict a whole movement which with all its faults is the organized effort of the working class to better its own condition. The recent revelations of the La Follette committee as to the purchase of gas bombs, machine guns and other weapons of gangsterland by large corporations indicate rather clearly that racketeering is more prevalent among the "upper crust" than among unions.

There is no discernible thesis except the questionable one that the unions are bad and in the hands of racketeers. The terrible "bolshies" as usual in such propaganda are playing the deuce.

Intelligent people are not interested in bugaboos. They are not scared at every passing shadow and do not believe every firecracker is a bolshevik bomb. They demand facts.

A Mid-Week Review of Current Publications

Product of a "Problem Child"

George Peek's Views On Foreign Trade Are Scrutinized.

By Henry F. Grady,

Dean of the College of Commerce, University of California; Late Chief of the Division of Trade Agreements, Department of State.

THERE are two general points of view with reference to what our commercial policy and, by corollary, our agricultural policy, should be. The policy now being followed by the Administration both with regard to agriculture and trade represents an attempt to get back as far as possible to the pre-war status, when our agricultural surpluses readily found a foreign outlet and international trade was regulated through an international price system functioning under the gold standard.

While such a policy recognizes reasonable tariffs as an accepted method of trade control, it is opposed to the various new types of control, such as quotas, exchange allocations, and Government monopolies, particularly the operation of these controls on a preferential discriminatory basis. It opposes, in a word, the regimentation of international trade. Because of its opposition to the method of pressure and the trading of preferences in a desperate effort to secure export markets, it favors temporary crop restriction as a corrective for agricultural surpluses. It opposes also any form of dumping abroad through Government aid or otherwise.

The opposing view seeks a policy of trade expansion by bargaining with individual countries on the conditional most-favored nation principle (this so-called principle properly understood is a contradiction in terms) and of using trade control or exchange control or any other device which may seem to secure advantage. In other words, this second view would follow the policies now being followed by a number of European countries and some Latin countries, particularly those countries that have gone over to fascism or communism and hence are committed to the philosophy of regimentation.

Mr. George N. Peek is generally regarded as the leading exponent in this country of this second point of view. Peek's agricultural views may be expressed briefly as McNary-Haugenism—that is, some form of export subsidy without crop restriction. The book now under consideration* is intended not only as an exposition of the Peek position, but as a general and thoroughgoing criticism of the other policy as applied to both agriculture and trade by the Roosevelt Administration.

ANYONE who knows the writings of Mr. Peek and Mr. Crowther will expect an enthusiastically partisan statement and will not be disappointed. When they take a position they are not inclined to leave anything unsaid that will help to make clear the strength of their convictions. If this involves some serious misstatements and distortions of fact, what does it matter? These are virile, hard-hitting American patriots who have wearied of the namby-pamby "internationalism" that is "selling us out" and threatening to ruin the country. They have joined common cause to tell the American people "what can be done" about it. Their first joint enterprise was a series of six articles which were published last spring in the Saturday Evening Post and which make up about half of this book.

The association of these two gentlemen is an interesting one. Some one was kind enough to send me a complimentary copy of this book. I have also from time to time received free copies of Mr. Crowther's books on economic self-containment. Can it be that Mr. Peek and Mr. Crowther and my book patron are of one mind on the farm problem, economic isolationism and the tariff on chemicals? Mr. Crowther starts with isolationism and chemical tariffs and Mr. Peek starts with the problems of agriculture and they both gravitate to a common position of militant opposition to the Administration's whole farm and trade policy. But since the book is written not by George N. Peek and Samuel Crowther, but by George N. Peek with Samuel Crowther, it may be assumed to be primarily an exposition of what has well been called "Peekonomics."

One could not be on a committee with George Peek for a year, as I have been, without being able to identify, if not to understand, peekonomics. As a matter of fact it is easier to understand Peek than peekonomics. A word about the former may be a key to the better interpretation of the latter. Peek is a businessman. Though he has occupied several important Government positions, he would not for a moment have himself regarded as a politician or a bureaucrat! He was for some years an executive of a plow company which failed. Selling agricultural instruments awakened his interest in the problems of agriculture. The problems of agriculture ultimately led him into the problems of foreign trade. He is regarded in some quarters as an authority on both. That he himself whole-heartedly supports this view is evidenced by the fact that he judges the rightness or wrongness of individuals or proposals by the extent to which they agree with him.

"I had," he says, "left the Republican Party to support Alfred E. Smith in 1928 because he promised to put into effect the farm program which I had been working on as far back as 1922. I worked for the election of Franklin D. Roosevelt because he seemed to comprehend the farm situation and promised to try to solve it along the lines a group of us had been steadily advocating." (Page 112). But apparently after he became administrator of the AAA he quickly found himself in disagreement with everybody and so he "resigned" to become special adviser to the President on foreign trade.

Why, with the Department of Commerce and foreign trade agencies in other departments functioning, there should have been such an office created, and why, if created, George Peek, the Administration's problem child, should have been appointed, will always be difficult to understand. The President once said he would be content if he were right 75 per cent of the time. You cannot read this book without being forced to the conclusion from Peek's own statements that the President's appointment of him to the AAA, to the post of special adviser and to the presidency of the Export-Import Bank, will just have to be charged up to the 25 per cent!

PEEK'S opinion of his associates in the Government is frequently expressed. "They, fanatic-like, believed that their objectives transcended the objectives of ordinary human beings and therefore could not allow themselves to be hampered by the codes of ordinary mental honesty, by platform pledges, by the Constitution, or by any of the ordinary rules of human conduct." (Page 12.) Henry Wallace is apparently not quite that bad. "The present Secretary of Agriculture had never been an active member of our farm group (conclusive proof of his heterodoxy) and had not gone through the days of battle. He had rather tended to specialize in the study of corn and was a dreamy, honest-minded and rather likeable sort of fellow." (Page 59.)

But "Secretary Wallace, who has an elastic and fantastic mind capable of any stretching, alone managed to be in both groups" (socialist and internationalist) (Page 13). Peek goes on to describe his associates as divided into these two classes of socialists and internationalists—both of which seem equally repugnant to him. In any case, they are theorists and bunglers without that God-saving business experience which he alone, apparently, in all Washington has enjoyed. He insists, however, that "this book has been conceived and written not in a partisan spirit, but solely in an effort to take the question of national prosperity and well-being out of the realm of mere words and theory and to discuss them on the sure basis of fact."

But though Peek stresses the necessity of fact-finding as against "factless theory" and makes several recommendations (pp. 351 et seq.) as to how his proposed "Foreign Trade Board" shall get the necessary facts, he himself seems to have no need for this fact-finding machinery to support those theories of his own upon which the book is based. If you were to say that the gentleman is naive you would be guilty of gross understatement. Moreover, though he condemns internationalism and socialism with equal vehemence, he proposes measures more collectivistic in their implications than anything that has been done this side of the Rhine.

Not only commodity trade, but all the items in the balance sheet are to be managed. Our foreign economic relations are to be thoroughly regimented. He proposes "selective exports and imports" under a licensing system with, it would seem, the much-despised bureaucrats deciding what can come in and what go out; embargoes on competitive imports with apparently complete disregard of price, or quotas, based on "actual requirements"—"actual requirements" again apparently to be determined by bureaucrats; exchange control and some form of foreign-owned security confiscation so "that a part at least of the large foreign holdings in the United States be applied to the liquidation of war debts;" "termination of the buying of gold and silver at improvident prices from abroad" (whatever this means or however it is to be done, it implies government control of bullion flow). If you want to regiment your national economy, the quickest way is to regiment your foreign trade! These suggestions from a severe critic of collectivism!

PEEK apparently has no conception of the inter-relation of all the items on the balance-of-payments sheet. In fact he is confused and contradictory on this whole subject. He wants increased exports and decreased imports, gold imports stopped or restricted, short and long-term capital movements regulated and immigrant remittances and tourist expediture earmarked for debt payment. As one who "took inventory" of our international position (this, by the way, has been done yearly by the Department of Commerce since 1923), as soon as he became special adviser he must know that in any account you must strike a balance and that you cannot change the result by juggling the position of the items. He persists in saying we are no longer a creditor country and says in his preface that the report of the Department of Commerce, "Foreign Investments of the United States," proves his contention even though the report clearly shows that we have a net creditor position of seven and one-quarter billion! What is lacking, "mental honesty" or mental capacity?

Having resigned from the Government, Peek set up an office in Washington where he employs several experts. This office is costing him a considerable sum, but his passion for the farmer's welfare is still strong! He will freely supply on request Peek statistics or Peek analyses of our agricultural position or our foreign trade. In fact, one hears from high sources familiar peekisms, as in Gov. Landon's recent Minneapolis speech, containing that priceless Peek jewel, "the way to trade is to trade."

Oh, Governor!

IT would be utterly impossible in a short review to discuss or even list all the misstatements and misrepresentations which the book contains. Peek is a disappointed man. He wished to direct the AAA along the lines of his own beliefs and was not permitted to do so. Likewise, as special adviser, he tried to control and direct American commercial policy. He found the expert personnel of all the interested departments in disagreement with him. As president of the Export-Import Bank he attempted to press a policy of bilateralism which was in conflict with the purposes of the trade agreements act and the commercial policy logically based on it.

Very few, if any, of the business men who were on his various advisory committees supported his views. The only comfort he gets is among the high-tariff die-hards of the opposition in and out of Congress. But he persevered. His final effort was to endeavor to get through the last Congress a bill establishing a "foreign trade board," of which he presumably was to be head and which was to take over all trade and commercial policy matters. His list submitted to Congress of the 50-odd "competing agencies" in the Government handling foreign trade matters was silly, but is a demonstration of how far he is willing to go in attempting to prove the need for "co-ordinating," which is simply another word for Peekizing, our foreign trade.

Neither Mr. Peek nor his book would be taken the least bit seriously if this were not a campaign year.

"A PUZZLE FOR FOOLS," by Patrick Quentin. (Simon and Schuster, $2.)

Perhaps circuses should not be mentioned in the same breath with psychopathic institutions, but following the plots and counter-plots in "A Puzzle For Fools," by Patrick Quentin, struck me as being similar to focusing attention upon three simultaneous ring performances under the Big Top. In spite of the numerous characters and their idiosyncrasies, which shift suspicion first from one to another, to the author's credit it is not difficult to concentrate upon the various acts.

The scene of the book is laid in Dr. Lenz's private sanitarium, catering principally to victims of melancholia. Peter Duluth, a young theatrical producer and self-committed patient seeking relief from chronic alcoholism, tells in it the breath-taking experiences encountered during his confinement there. Mysterious voices, sinister messages and warnings are forerunners of murder, the solution of which not only saves borderline patients from complete insanity, but serves to cure Duluth of further danger from delirium tremens.

Although the medical profession might be inclined to wonder how Dr. Lenz's well-ordered establishment could be the locale for so much intrigue, the account is presented so logically and convincingly that in the end it is possible—for the layman, at least—to make himself believe that, after all, such things might actually have occurred.

Duluth's gripping tale, related in a delightfully humorous vein, holds reader interest to the last—as well as the identity of the murderer—which are the principal earmarks of a good mystery story.

This is one of the first four books published by Simon & Schuster under its new department of "Inner Sanctum Mysteries."

Acrobats

"ALL THEIR CHILDREN WERE ACROBATS," by Harry Hamilton. (Bobbs-Merrill.)

Emma Songermann Donovan was born in an age when nice little girls did not join circuses. Otherwise she would most certainly have been an acrobat herself instead of just the mother of three. (In fact, Mike, her husband, always said she had marked the children to such an extent no other career was possible for them.) So, "all their children were acrobats."

This, Harry Hamilton's second novel, like his first, "Banjo on My Knee," is a selection of characters as familiar and American as apple pie and coffee. Only by writing simply and naturally could Hamilton have made them live. And this he does without touching them too closely or steeping himself too thoroughly with their hue.

From An Ivory Tower

By Sidney Olson

THERE is one Ivory Tower in this Nation and its dweller is named Carl Van Doren. All others are counterfeit, or inhabited by myopic and grudging fellows, whose windows are slammed shut on the view and whose doors are closed to fresh air. Mr. Van Doren is not A Man With A Message, but he is very definitely a man with a message. He has written his autobiography, naming it "Three Worlds."

In this book, in his cloudless prose, as lucid as a shaving mirror and as musical as an old lullaby, America's leading noncombatant critic has laid out the neat pattern of his life and his thought.

His voice pitched so low that the hasty reader must be warned to approach softly, Van Doren tells of his youth, World Number One, which was spent on an Illinois farm without the disadvantages of the telephone, the electric light, milking machines and McCormick harvesters. The World War's holocaust on the horizon was the signal fire that his first world was burning to destruction.

World Number Two was the postwar period of all the sad young men and all the flat young ladies, of Mencken and his boobs, of the stock market and gin, of free thinking and free-wheeling, of the discovery of sex and the forgetting of Santa Claus.

The Third World began with the death of the bull market in 1929.

THROUGH his worlds Van Doren went carefully and surely, treading with quiet and accurate step the bog-strewn paths of conflicting belief, living when others died because his flexible mind rejected falsity, no matter how brave its tinsel cover, and clung persistently to standards, not totems.

He studied American literature as few men have. On contemporaries he made no frontal attacks, nor did he stab them in the back. Rather he peered around their masks and examined coolly their mechanism, their output, and its relation to the true and the good.

He has taught more teachers of American literature, at Columbia University, than anyone who comes to mind. He edited the Century and the Nation in their literary divisions. He organized and for eight years was chief editor of the Literary Guild. And so on.

• • • •

THE first section of the book is one of the finest expositions of the simple pleasures and simple agonies of living on a pre-war farm that you'll ever see. The second third is more turbid, more complex, as were the times he studies. Almost casually he inserts brilliant analyses of the men he met who were the makers of American literature, including a full-length portrait of Elinor Wylie that is the best graph yet of that elusive spirit's complicated sky-soaring and earth-crashing, and a superb set of sidelights on Edwin Arlington Robinson.

The third section, "Boom: Depression: Resolution," is exactly that. He says:

"In the midst of the general depression each man had a depression of his own. • • • By April of 1929 I had come to feel, not understand, a deep trouble and division in my mind.

"• • • I turned aside because the times were dissolving, and I, premonitorily, with them."

VAN DOREN found a penthouse and turned hermit. "It was a general soreness, as if my skin had worn away and left my nerves bare. • • • If this were fiction I might say that I went into retreat to think things out. It still is history. I have never in my life thought things out, nor have I known anybody who ever did. I always had to live them out, thinking as I went along. In my penthouse I was less a philosopher than a bear licking his wounds while nature healed them."

And he thought things out, and his mind became straight and clear. He picked his way through fascism and communism to determine that fundamentally, with all thoughtful liberals, his way was American and his philosophy democratic, and that his belief, unmystical and unradditional, "came down to this: that in the long run many heads are better than one."

Affirming a belief only in the American stamina and its obstinate courage, Van Doren ends his picture modestly: "You know, and I do not. I have only told you what I know about these times."

Court Credited By Vandenberg For Recovery

Supreme Bench, Not Acts of Roosevelt, Caused Upturn, He Says.

By the Associated Press.

Marquette, Mich., Oct. 6.—United States Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, in his second speech of a tour of the Michigan Upper Peninsula, tonight said "the Supreme Court, rather than the Roosevelt junta, is entitled to whatever credit anyone wants to give for resurgent prosperity."

"Prosperity has not come because 'Roosevelt planned it this way,'" he said. "The Roosevelt party likes to claim that its patent medicines have produced the present upturn in trade and employment, but I insist that it is denied by the record.

"They planned the NRA method of reviving business and jobs, they planned restricted production, controlled prices, rationed jobs and the whole show was run from mahogany desks in Washington. So long as that lasted, the business index went down and unemployment increased and the depression threatened to hit new lows. Then came a unanimous Supreme Court to say that NRA violated the fundamental American system. Out went NRA. Up turned the business index. Back to renewed jobs went millions of men."

Pinchot Praises Landon.

Wichita, Kans., Oct. 6 (AP).—Gifford Pinchot, former Governor of Pennsylvania, told an audience here tonight "What it takes to run the government, Alf Landon has."

The requirements, Pinchot said, are "clear purpose, tenacity and drive."

Pinchot devoted his address to Landon's pledge to extend the merit system in Government employment.

"To get good government, you have to have public servants who know how to work," he said.

Pinchot cited figures intended to show that since June 30, 1933, Postmaster General James A. Farley, whom he described as Roosevelt's "wicked partner," had increased the Federal pay roll to 824,000 persons, 325,000 of whom were outside the merit system.

Gov. Earle Barred.

Coudersport, Pa., Oct. 6 (AP).—Gov. George H. Earle found the doors of the Potter County Courthouse locked against him today and made a scheduled political speech for the Democratic Party in the open air near the county building.

Burr Van de Boe, one of the Republican county commissioners, said the courthouse doors were closed to the Governor because the Democrats refused to remove a political banner stretched across the street in front of the building after they had been denied permission to place it.

Reed Warns Labor.

Jersey City, N. J., Oct. 6 (AP).—James A. Reed, former Democratic Senator from Missouri, tonight warned labor that "the power to regulate wages up or hours of labor down is the power to regulate wages down" or inaugurate longer hours.

In a speech prepared for delivery at a meeting sponsored by the National Jeffersonian Democrats in Dickinson High School, Reed repeated his recent attack on President Roosevelt for what he termed the Rooseveltian "tirade against economic royalists."

Asserting that power of regulation could be used "to compel obedience to Government dictation," the gray-haired Missouri political veteran said that such a condition "exists now in Russia, in Italy and in Germany."

Wheeler Assails Foes.

Senator Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, said last night that hatred of "economic royalists" for President Roosevelt springs from "the course of action which the New Deal has started against monopoly and the excessive concentration of economic power."

In a broadcast address he said the New Deal banking acts, securities act, the stock exchange act, the utility holding company act, the intercorporate dividend tax and the corporate surplus tax "constitute the most impressive record of action ever taken by any Administration against private monopoly."

He said moneyed interests do not dare attack these statutes directly but talk instead "in mealy-mouthed terms about rugged individualism, preservation of the system and liberty."

Wheeler said Gov. Alf M. Landon, the Republican Presidential nominee, "has not dared to resurrect" anti-monopoly planks proposed by Senator Borah (Republican), Idaho, and "scrapped" by the Republican convention.

Asserting Treasury estimates of Federal income this fiscal year are too low in view of improved conditions, Senator McKellar (Democrat), Tennessee, said yesterday that the budget should be balanced within 18 months.

In a statement released by the Democratic National Committee, he said the Government's income for the year would be nearer $6,000,000,000 than the $5,666,000,000 which he described as the Treasury estimate.

"With constantly increasing income receipts due to prosperous times and constantly decreasing relief due to the same cause, it is clear that the budget should be balanced within a period of 18 months," his statement said.

Woman Forger Granted Parole

Baltimore, Oct. 6 (AP).—Gov. Harry W. Nice today paroled a young woman convicted of disguising herself with a blond wig in order to pass forged checks.

She is Mrs. Helen Dorman, 31, of Baltimore, convicted on 13 charges of forgery and two of false pretenses. Testimony at her trial was that she bought the blond wig from a costumer and wore it while passing the checks in furniture stores. Because of her disguise, she was not identified for some time.

The Governor said that her parole on her three-year sentence was recommended by "reputable citizens of the State."

The Governor also paroled Bernard H. Sherry, an attorney serving a two-year sentence for embezzlement, forgery and larceny.

G. O. P. Charges Further Fraud In WPA Ranks

Senate Inquirers Reply by Accusing Party of Bad Faith.

The Republican National Committee last night continued to make public, via radio, affidavits to show corruption in the WPA in Pennsylvania. The special Senate committee to investigate campaign expenditures replied by accusing the Republicans of bad faith.

"That the Republican National Committee is not acting in good faith is clear to any person informed of the Pennsylvania situation," said a statement from the investigating committee, of which Senator Lonergan (Democrat), Connecticut, is chairman. "Instead of presenting its complaints to this committee it uses them on the radio as an excuse for a political talk."

The Senate group said it would dispose of complaints "in a judicial manner."

"The Republican National Committee can best demonstrate its desire for purity by generating light and not heat," it added.

Charges Called False.

Broadcast of three affidavits Monday night brought a statement from Edward N. Jones, Pennsylvania Works Progress Administrator, that all the charges contained in them were false.

Meanwhile, the National Emergency Council gave out figures compiled by the Treasury Department showing the cost of administering relief. The figures indicated that of $3,424,564,516 spent from the 1935 relief appropriation, 4.51 per cent went to administration costs.

Of the total of $154,476,341 spent for administration, $64,562,870 was disbursed by the Works Progress Administration, the report showed. This represented 4.87 per cent of the expenditures. The Resettlement Administration, headed by Rexford Guy Tugwell, paid $27,705,095 as the administrative cost of spending $134,518,438.

The additional affidavits charging irregularities in Pennsylvania were read on the radio by William Hard, broadcaster for the G. O. P. committee.

Instances Are Cited.

The charges included these instances:

William Feinsinger, Philadelphia, gave up a position in his father's printing establishment to take a position in the WPA. He is a Democratic committeeman in the sixth division of the Fifth Ward. He never was on the relief rolls.

Harry Schmuckler, Philadelphia, operating a tailoring, repairing and cleaning shop, is employed by the WPA. He is a Democratic committeeman and was on the relief rolls.

Miss May Brodt, Philadelphia, is employed by the WPA and also is a Democratic registrar. She performed her duties as registrar when she normally would be employed on a WPA project. She never was on relief.

Another affidavit, signed by Harry H. Ball, WPA project engineer, said he was required to switch his registration from Republican to Democratic and to draw his foremen and other supervisory employes from a list supplied by the Democratic organization. He said many of these employes were incompetent.

Democrat's Letter Quoted.

Hard read over the air a letter written by Ball to Anthony P. Barrett, Democratic chairman of Delaware County. The letter said:

"I have your letter regarding Robert S. Dugdale, 271 Coverly road, Lansdowne. From your point of view Mr. Dugdale is not qualified for sewer work. You look at it with the eyes of an engineer. I was just telling Mr. Green the other day how I came to select the general foreman on the road project which is so highly regarded by the WPA officials. All of those men have made good in a way, but none of them could have qualified from an engineer's point of view. Not one had previous experience as general foremen nor practical experience as road men. The fundamental rule that guided me in their selection was 'a good party worker makes an excellent public servant.'"

Hard announced the affidavits were being turned over to the Lonergan committee.

Don't Always Lead Partner's Suit.

Usually it is eminently correct to lead the suit that partner has bid. The fact that he has definitely advertised strength in that suit gives eyes, one might say, to what otherwise would have to be a blind opening.

But in contract the exceptions to rules often are more vital than the rules themselves. The reason for this is that hands which require application of these exceptions are apt to be "swing hands," meaning that two diametrically different results depend upon decision of the players themselves, not the vagaries of the cards.

When a player makes what can be recognized as a purely defensive bid, there is no logic in placing him with "tops" in the suit. We all have had occasion to put in defensive bids on suits as weak as jack high, with some outside strength. Indeed, such desperate measures often are necessary to "pushing tactics" when the opponents have bid to a part-score. When a desperate situation exists, therefore, the opening leader should almost disregard partner's bid and make his selection on the basis of his own hand.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 spade	Pass	Pass	2 clubs
2 diamonds	Pass	2 spades	Pass
Pass	Pass

East fully realized that his two club bid was dangerous, but who can blame him for at least a faint effort at defending against the 90 part-score?

West woodenly selected the club ace as the opening lead and, after that, there was no defense that could deprive declarer of eight tricks. The belated shift by West to a spade was won by dummy's queen, and the jack of hearts was led. East won with the ace and returned a trump, but the damage was done. Declarer won, cashed his king of clubs and king of hearts, and then led three rounds of diamonds, ruffing the last with dummy's last trump. Then, to add insult to injury, dummy's third club was ruffed with declarer's otherwise worthless low trump and thus the contract was made with an overtrick.

Had West used a little judgment on the ouening lead, instead of jumping at the chance to dodge responsibility by opening partner's suit, he would have seen that nothing could be gained by laying down the club ace. With two low clubs in addition to the ace there was virtually no chance that he might get in a club ruff or overruff. A trump, from his sequence, would have been the logical lead against South's declaration of two suits. Even with a trump opening it would have required careful defense to defeat the contract. On the lead of the heart jack from dummy, East should merely cover with the queen, not play the ace. Then, when West later gained the lead with the club ace, he would have to return a heart to East's tenace over the dummy, and thus gain the opportunity to discard a club in order to overruff declarer when he should attempt to ruff a third round of clubs.

Lowden Praises Landon Policy On Agriculture

Former Governor Assails New Deal on Relief, 'Blows at Business.'

By the Associated Press.

Waterloo, Iowa, Oct. 6.—Former Gov. Frank O. Lowden of Illinois praised the farm policies of Gov. Alf M. Landon before a Farm Belt audience here tonight.

Introduced by C. A. Benson, of Elkader, Republican candidate for Iowa secretary of agriculture, as a man "born and raised in the State of Iowa and fully conversant with the Iowa farm problem," Lowden talked at the Waterloo Dairy Congress Hippodrome.

William Benson, building superintendent, estimated the audience in the building, which he said will seat 8,500, as about 4,200.

Applause from the audience interrupted the former Governor frequently as he mentioned the name of the Republican Presidential nominee, assailed the Administration's method of handling relief and described the "supreme issue" in the campaign as maintenance "in substance as well as in form the American scheme of government."

Lowden said American recovery has "lagged behind" because the Democratic Administration "has delivered repeated blows at reviving confidence in the future."

Raises Voice for Stress.

He raised his voice when he spoke of the New Deal and when he quoted critically "words of President Roosevelt" to stress his statements.

"We may have faith," he said, "that other problems, pressing though they may be, will find a proper solution if we maintain the essentials of our Government."

He praised Gov. Landon's stand on agriculture, asserting "that he understands and is in full sympathy with the interests and aspirations of the farmer population there can be be no doubt."

"Looking to the long future," he said in reference to a soil conservation program, "this is the most important question of all.

"I have thought for years that we would produce no burdensome surplus if only we were farming in a way to save the fertility of our soil for the generations which shall come after us.

Warns of Cost Rise.

"If our present-day practices upon our farms continue, it is only a question of time until the United States will be hard put to it to furnish food and fibers for her people at anything like a reasonable cost."

The farm family and the "family-size farm," he said, should be "special objects of our concern."

Attacking the Administration spending program, he said "mounting taxes are only half the story.

"Although the Government seems to have pretty well exhausted all possible sources of revenue, it is now expending $2 for every $1 it receives in revenue."

The 75-year-old former Governor criticized Federal relief methods and asserted that "incompetence and partiality have inevitably crept into administration of relief centered in Washington."

Condemns Central Relief.

"This monstrous perversion of humane purposes cannot be too strongly condemned," Lowden said. "If relief is to be administered wisely and economically, it must be administered by the local authorities with such aid from the Government as may be needed."

He asserted that "you cannot maintain the morale of a people by making relief rolls more attractive than pay rolls and just as honorable."

His proposals he summarized briefly:

"We cannot have a healthy and permanent prosperity until these idle millions are put back to work. Balance the budget; restore the Government to the role of umpire and not participant in business; give some assurance that the money advanced for capital expenditures shall be paid back in dollars of equal value, and confidence in the future of America will return to the bewildered business man. In this way, and this way only, can we convert relief rolls into pay rolls.

Street Car Fells Holton School Aid

Miss Louise de Lane, a teacher in Holton-Arms School, was in critical condition at Emergency Hospital last night, after having been struck by a street car at Fifteenth and G streets northwest.

Witnesses said the street car, operated by Motorman Collin M. Bowen, of 1234 D street northeast, turned into Fifteenth street from G street when the accident occurred.

Physicians said Miss de Lane had a fractured shoulder, concussion of the brain and multiple cuts and bruises. Bowen was not held.

Non-Strikers on Paper Will Fight to Keep Jobs

Seattle, Oct. 6 (AP).—Post-Intelligencer employes, other than mechanical and newsroom departments, issued a statement through the Seattle Times today, announcing they had organized to fight for the right to work.

The Hearst paper suspended publication indefinitely last August 15 due to an American Newspaper Guild newsroom strike.

The statement, signed by a committee of six men, criticized the situation by which a minority of the paper's 600 employes could force it to close and cost their fellow employes their livelihood.

Repeal Boosted Crime, Saloon League Holds

Crimes connected with liquor are on the increase throughout the United States, the Antisaloon League of America charged yesterday after a study of reports submitted by State officials to the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Fingerprint data compiled from the records of persons arrested for serious violations of State laws and city ordinances during the first six months of the past four years show a marked increase in arrests for drunkenness and driving while drunk, the report said.

Comdr. Holland Dies At West Coast Base

Lieut. Comdr. Charles Philip Holland, Dental Corps, U. S. N., died Monday at the Navy Hospital, San Diego, Calif., it was announced by the Navy Department yesterday.

Dr. Holland was born in 1878 at Fort Wayne, Ind., and graduated from the Philadelphia Dental College in 1900. He entered the Dental Corps as an assistant dental surgeon in 1921, having previously served in the Naval Reserve force from August, 1916, where he originally reported for duty at the Naval Training Station, Great Lakes, Ill. Dr. Holland was promoted to the rank of lieutenant commander, Dental Corps, United States Navy, on June 30, 1931.

He is survived by his wife, a daughter and a son.

Mrs. Olga McCormick Wed to John F. Clagett

Mrs. Olga Bayne McCormick, 26, Washington society woman distantly related to President Roosevelt, yesterday was married to John Frazer Clagett, member of a prominent southern Maryland family.

The ceremony was performed by Dr. Virginius Dabney, of 1633 Connecticut avenue, with whom Clagett has been living. John Strider acted as a witness.

The marriage revealed that Mrs. Clagett had been granted a Mexican divorce a month ago from William McCormick, of Warrenton, Va.

Council Opens National Peace Forum Today

Labor and Farmers Attend Ninth Annual Session to Draft Platform.

The ninth annual meeting of the National Council for Prevention of War will get under way here today.

Its gathering, boosted in numbers by representatives of organized labor, organized farmers, religious bodies, women's groups and colleges, the conference doors will be opened at 10 a. m. at the Hotel Lee House. The general public is invited to this session.

This is the first time in the history of the country that representatives of such groups have been brought together for the purpose of acting as collaborators in drawing up a legislative program which they can jointly support at the next session of Congress.

Seeking to formulate a platform which its sponsors hope will be "a concrete, middle-of-the-road program" the joint conference will set about planning how its nationwide influence can best be felt. Its avowed object will be to achieve the one purpose for which it exists—the prevention of war.

Experts on Program.

At this morning's session, experts will discuss the council's six proposed planks. Stephen Raushenbush, chief investigator for the Nye committee will be heard on "Nationalizing Munitions and Taxing War Profits;" Henry F. Grady, former chief of the trade agreements section of the State Department, will talk on "The Easing of Economic Tensions;" William T. Stone, of the Foreign Policy Association, will discuss "Neutrality Legislation;" Mauritz Hallgren, of the Washington staff of the Baltimore Sun, will speak on "A National Defense Policy;" Dr. Philip C. Jessup, professor of international law at Columbia University will choose "International Co-operation" as his subject. Another speaker will be Dr. Belmont Farley, of the National Education Association, and his theme will be "Freedom of Speech."

Questions on each of these issues will be raised at the morning session and recorded for discussion at later committee meetings. Separate groups will draft each plank at the afternoon session, and report their findings in the evening.

Group Work Tomorrow.

Tomorrow the conference will break up into separate groups—labor, farmer, church, organized women and colleges—to consider the best possible methods for securing legislative action on their program.

A highlight of the second day will be a public dinner at the Lee House at 7 p. m. when, it is hoped, speakers representing the Republican and Democratic parties will unlimber their big guns on the issue: "The peace-minded voters of the country should support (Landon or Roosevelt.)"

Philippine Lepers Flee Confinement, Parade in Protest

By the Associated Press.

Manila, Oct. 6.—Several hundred lepers broke out of San Lazaro Hospital today, marched through Manila streets to the Presidential Palace and protested against being held as "prisoners."

For hours the afflicted hundreds paraded through the streets. Police attempted to break up the demonstration, but captured only 11.

The others went on to the grounds of Malacanan Palace, residence of President Manual Quezon. Jose Vargas, presidential secretary, met the lepers in front of the palace.

They presented a memorial asserting they were being held as prisoners. They contended tuberculosis was more dangerous to the public than leprosy.

The lepers had been granted a parade permit yesterday, but it was rescinded at the last minute.

Biding their time, they overpowered a hospital guard early this morning, surged over the institution's walls and headed for the palace.

Vargas promised to present their views to Quezon and they were herded back to the hospital by police.

Montgomery Lists 1,200 Voters in Day

Slightly more than 1,200 Montgomery County residents took advantage yesterday of the final opportunity to register prior to the November 3 election.

Unofficial returns from all but one small rural precinct last night showed new registrations of 813 Democrats and 433 Republicans.

Yesterday's registration brought the county list to an estimated 21,858 Democrats and 9,829 Republicans with several hundred not affiliated with any party.

The new registration yesterday was slightly more favorable to the Democratic cause than last Tuesday. The Republicans again gained the advantage in Ninth Takoma Park precinct, third Rockville precinct, and first Olney precinct.

The best Democratic showing was in Silver Spring where the Democrats gained a better than three-to-one margin, in Bethesda with a two-to-one margin, and in Potomac where the registration was 30 Democrats and only 3 Republicans. Registration again was comparatively light.

Convicts Exempted From Cosmetics Tax

Baltimore, Oct. 6 (AP).—At least one section of Maryland's population—inmates of State penal institutions—will escape the 10 per cent cosmetic tax, under a ruling issued today by Attorney General Herbert R. O'Conor.

O'Conor's decision pointed out that the cosmetics section of the 1936 relief tax act specified "toilet articles and cosmetics sold at retail." State prisoners obtain their needs through a commissary arrangement, he said, with no cash changing hands.

The welfare board purchases the goods distributed through the commissaries, including cosmetics, at wholesale prices. The money used is that credited to prisoners from their earnings, the welfare board acting solely as agent for the inmates.

Flames Damage Furniture Store

Fire, attributed to inflammable finishing liquids which became ignited on the first floor, last night damaged the Household Furniture Co. store, 829 Seventh street northwest, to the extent of about $5,000.

Traffic was tied up for a block around the scene of the blaze as two alarms brought apparatus to the scene.

Most of the damage was done to furniture in the show rooms. The blaze burned stubbornly, and early today firemen were still spraying water on the interior of the building.

British Labor Party Backs Defense Policy

Edinburg, Soctland, Oct. 6 (AP).—The British Labor Party announced today its members had voted by a majority of 1,061,000 in a card poll to support an armament policy which would make the nation safe against any "potential aggressor."

Its leader, Maj. Clement R. Attlee, declared in an address at the party's annual conference, however, the party could never support the government's "competitive" race to rearm.

Curfew Club Makes Merry At Shoreham

Smart Late Nighters Enjoy Hour Prior to Closing in Hotel Lounge.

By Chanticleer.

All the about-towners, the traveled stay-up-laters and the long-about-midnighters are talking about the One-to-Two Club—out at the Shoreham. It's in that one hour, between 1 and 2 a. m., just before the Shoreham curfew sounds that the One-to-Two Clubbers get going—and the lounge is the place.

They're not strangers—it's not a private club. It's just one of those things. Mellow and gay young ideas, supported by white-haired and dignified gentlemen, red-headed collegiataes, diplomats and reigning belles. Good-fellowship is the requisite if you're thinking of joining the club. Really very smart and very good fun.

Something else special this week are the Gaylene Sisters, in sophisticated English musical comedy numbers. Costumes with the green parasols especially good.

Something new in night fare—the Theater Intime offered at the Russian "Volga Boatman" which went into the season's premiere last evening. Theater Intime takes its name from that original miniature theater—Balieff's Chauve-Sourris. (I hope my Russian spelling is bearing up properly today.)

Matt Windsor's opening was splendid. His extravaganza includes no less than 25 Russian entertainers, the best that Host Windsor could bill after scouring the talent marts. You'll meet Leonidoff, Russian basso, with a cosmopolitan charm; Gypsy Kolia and his violin, maestro of the orchestra and soloist; Clelia Rambova, in Russian porcelain and bachhanal dances; Melanie de Roche, dramatic soprano, and the Danseuse Ballet Extraordinaire, a Russian Gypsy chorus of 18 voices. And, of course, Matt Windsor and his accordion, and Anna Sablukova, of the Russian Roof.

We pay our respects, too, a little belatedly perforce, to Sidney and his cohorts of the Mayflower for a grand party last week on the occasion of the opening of the lounge. Sidney was right, his famous music was right and no one can deny that Cyril Smith, the Englishman who recites the adventures of Albert and the lion, and Sonny Forbes were right. The consensus, principally of the customers (and after all they are the best judges) was that Miss Forbes will go places. For bacon and eggs in an entirely new setting the expansive and shining basement kitchen of the Mayflower are unequaled.

• • • • •

New artists, new costumes, new acts. That's the order of the week at the Lotus, where the main attraction is the Paul Florenz Girls in a glittering fast-moving show. Paul Florenz's shows have always clicked, perhaps because the costuming is at once attractive—and, shall we say, daring. A feature number, appropriate to the racing season, is the "Paddock Revue."

Check all the outstanding and positive attractions at Maryland Club Gardens in favor of one that stands out over all: the crystal bar. It always has been the focal point and this season is no different. Its handsomeness is hightened by the fact you can rest an elbow on the mahogany, if you wish.

• • • • •

Been wondering about the Russian Troika? It opens October 15. Helen Hamilton, the Troika lady, is in town, but is waiting to spring the season's premiere at the Connecticut avenue spot until later, as a surprise. Sasha Bartnovsky, last season's maestro, will be back, however, according to my spies. Mischa Markoff is also sure to be present. He was emmcee for the Troika's first opening, five years ago.

Ben Alley has been held over at the La Paree. And a brand new revue comes in Friday. Don't forget Friday night is college night and Sunday night is skyride night (WMAL).

• • • • •

If you're addicted to swing music, you'll find Bill Cassi and his orchestra proving the better brand nightly at Griffith Farms—up to 2 a. m. Louis Clerico now looking after the comforts of the patrons . . . Last Sunday set a new record for Brinkley's. For dinners, of course. And Monday set a new high for cocktails and things . . . Jack Campbell and Roy Kiser had a bit of a relief the other day at the Mayfair. A trio (guitar, violin and accordion) filled in between Kiser-Campbell numbers.

• • • • •

Interesting observation at the Dude Ranch this week: Katis and Ray are featured in tango and Gypsy numbers. It was only a few months ago that Katis and Ray were billed at the Ranch—at which time they were just breaking in to the night-ery entertainment business. What an improvement—and a lesson in what hard work and practice will do.

Another record: Last Saturday night broke all attendance at Cocoanut Grove since the K street nightery opened last May. Paul Tremaine and his orchestra are one reason—and little Kitty Simons another. Kitty's been at the Grove just one week but she's proven herself a show-topper. Bobby Gillette and Shirley Richards, dancers, and June Burnette, singing comedienne, are highlights of the floor show. And, of course, a chorus of beautiful maidens.

We're still waiting for the formal opening at Ramon's—but the fact it hasn't yet taken place isn't keeping the patrons away. One of the week's distinguished visitors was Josephine, of the Maryland Club Gardens. (Josephine is the Gardens' pet chimpanzee.) The customers loved the visit.

Volga Boatman in Fall Opening

On the Air Today

Ethel Barrymore, with a new program, and Fred Allen, in a return to his established period, stand out in the day's program notices.

Miss Barrymore only a few weeks ago announced she would never be heard via the airways—and then changed around and promptly signed a contract for an entire series. The first, tonight, WMAL, at 8:30, brings re-creation of her first starring vehicle, "Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines," dating back to 1901.

Only a few months ago Brother Lionel did a series of programs with Sigmund Romberg. Brother John has never been heard with regularity on the air. So it is that Miss Barrymore's series keeps the distinguished family name of the theater in the radio van.

Very little can be said about the return of John F. Sullivan (Fred Allen to you). Portland will be with him when he tackles a microphone tonight for the first time in several months — and the Allen Mighty Art Players, Peter van Steeden's orchestra, the quartet and others of the regular winter troupe. The routine of the program will not be changed. Stoopnagle and Budd, of course, will not be on hand as their appearances were scheduled only for the period Allen was vacationing. After all, Allen's return should be enough.

William S. Paley went on record yesterday before the Federal Communications Commission as not favoring the proposals for super-power for radio stations over the country. At least, urged the Columbia network president, considerable study should be devoted to the matter before any steps are taken.

Paley pointed out that, in the opinions of his experts, the establishment of 500,000-watt stations would destroy the economic security of small stations and would of necessity alter the structure of the present large chains of stations.

Arguing that super-power stations would provide equally effective service to Columbia network listeners as at present, the C. B. S. head based his appeal almost entirely on the basis of security for small town and small power stations which would find themselves without programs or revenue in sufficient volume and quality to remain in business and meet competition of the super-power setup.

Here and there: Charley Chase, the Hollywood comic, is said to be the next Paul Whiteman star attraction. The date is expected to be January 1 . . . James Melton, who has been none too active in radio recently, will be the guest star of the Cleveland automobile show in November. Melton is back in New York, having just completed his third flicker in Hollywood . . . Bob Burns' boss has voluntarily torn up his contract and drawn a new one boosting his pay to $1,700 weekly.

Henry King and his orchestra are so well liked by the Burns and Allen people that he is expected to be retained on a permanent basis . . . Charlie Winninger, another of the old guard of the air, who has not been heard from for some time, is very busy in Hollywood. Universal is said to be bent on building Winninger and Alice Brady into a starring film team . . . Charley Butterworth is now tagged as the most polite comedian in the business. He wired all the comics he imitated last Tuesday night for permission. Everybody said okay.

• • • • •

Some of the production gentlemen who get discouraged at times with a lack of English-speaking radio talent who possess good diction and who do not talk through their noses are encouraged by the success of Butterworth—and the trend represented through the later signing of Edward Everett Horton. May I again put in my small word—and urge that someone make overtures to Frank Morgan. Yes, the same veteran Frank Morgan of the films. He is my candidate and has been for some time as the "forgotten man" in radio. I believe he is just the same as "in" with the listener whenever he and the contract gentlemen get together.

Store Operator Freed on Bond In Assault Case

Burns Pleads Not Guilty to Girl's Charge; Will Fight Extradition.

John Henry Burns, 35, operator of a fruit store at Eighteenth street and Columbia road northwest, pleaded not guilty and demanded 30 days in which to fight extradition when arraigned in Police Court yesterday on a charge of criminally attacking a 26-year-old Washington woman.

Burns was released under $10,000 bond for a hearing November 6 when he will appear in Police Court to show cause why he should not be returned to Rockville, Md., to face charges.

Burns was arrested Friday on complaint of the woman, employed by a local haberdashery, that she had been criminally attacked by Burns for nearly four hours on a farm near Potomac, Md., on River road.

Bond was set in the case yesterday when Assistant District Attorney David Hart asked Judge Walter J. Casey to set the bail. In Maryland, where the offense is punishable by death or life imprisonment, the charge is unbondable.

Hart told the court he could see no reason why bond should not be set here insofar as Burns was a business man here and would appear to contest his extradition at the end of the 30 days.

A warrant charging Burns with the attack was presented to the court. It had been forwarded here by County Prosecutor James Pugh, of Rockville.

D. C. Truck Driver Cleared in Crash

Fredericksburg, Va., Oct. 6.—James Morgan, 20-year-old Washington truck-driver who was charged with manslaughter several weeks ago after an automobile collision in which Mr. and Mrs. Earl Tompkinson, also of Washington, were killed, was held blameless yesterday by a Spotsylvania grand jury.

Morgan, who lives in the 1700 block of I street northwest, was the driver of a truck which collided 7 miles south of here with a truck driven by Tompkinson. He had been held since the crash for grand jury action.

Tompkinson, father of six children, died in Mary Washington Hospital here a few hours after the accident. His wife, Mrs. Bertha Thompkinson, was killed almost instantly. The couple lived in the 1300 block of Fourth street southwest.

Expert Says World Is Undernourished

Rome, Oct. 6 (AP).—The world is undernourished, F. L. McDougall, Australian agricultural specialist, today said in a report to the biennial general assembly of the International Institute of Agriculture.

Many world agricultural problems would be solved, he said, if certain nations would increase their production of "protective foods," instead of concentrating on high wheat yields.

Satisfactory human diet must contain sufficient quantities of the kinds of food that provide these hitherto obscure elements in nutrition," the Australian said, explaining "the foods particularly valuable in this respect are milk, cheese, butter, fresh fruit and vegetables, eggs, fish and meat."

Queen Mary's Sistership Contract Let by Cunard

Liverpool, Oct. 6 (AP).—The Cunard-White Star Line today announced it had signed a contract with John Brown & Co. for construction of a sister ship to the Queen Mary.

The ship, expected to cost $27,500,000, will be built in the same berth at Clyde as the present queen of the Atlantic. Keel blocks already have been started.

Japanese Reds Seized.

"When Sinclair Lewis's 'It Can't Happen Here' opens on Broadway," a Tavern patron tips, "the program notes will read: 'Place; the United States. Time, very soon—or never.'" . . . Outside, a blind violinist plays "School Days." A gray-haired man pursues him up the street, to drop a dollar into his cup. . . . Gus Edwards, composer of that song. . . . "I got it straight from home," Bill Robinson whispers. "Van Mungo will pitch for St. Louis next year and won't lose five games."

Pauline Lord spies J. Edgar Hoover in Lindy's and asks to be introduced to him. . . . At a corner table, "Alabama" Kimmel makes the official odds for the ball games, deriving his living by getting an edge on the percentages. "Yeah, I'm 'Alabama,'" he admits. "I was born in Newark." . . . "I know why you English are so fond of tea," Ina Claire tells Emlyn Williams at the Persian Room. "Why" asks the British actor. . . . "Because," Miss Claire replies, "I tasted your coffee."

"Where can I get in touch with you?" Dashiell Hammett asks a once prosperous producer at "21" . . . "It's easy," is the reply. "Get my address from any of my creditors" . . . Three begowned ladies are politely told to leave—for annoying John Boles with autograph requests. "People come here to relax," they're told . . . "It's all very well to speak of Dietrich's legs," Ernst Lubitsch agrees, "but I've discovered she has something else, too. Watch for it in her next film."

"RKO just bought the screen rights to Kipling's poem, 'Ghunga Din,'" a Versailles bar standee confides. "Howard Hawkes will produce it" . . . "Harry Warner and I were at the ball game today," states Harry Cohn, head of Columbia Films. "So Warner looks at the packed stands and sez to me: 'Harry, maybe we're in the wrong business.'" . . . "Your mind's so narrow," a chorine tells her companion at the French Casino, "you could put it in a slot machine."

Lahr's to have as many solo sketches as Lillie, their parts in the double-sketches are to be weighed for laughs . . . and each one'll have a personal director."

Hollywood's Film Folks

By Sidney Skolsky.

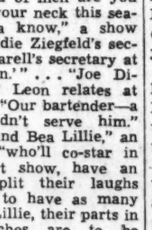
Hollywood, Oct. 6.

Barbara Stanwyck and Buddy Ebsen are playing a scene in the New Orleans Creole Cafe for the flicker "Banjo on My Knee." Ebsen looks as if he were one of the hill billies of that cartoon in Esquire. Talking on the set to Nunnally Johnson, who wrote the scenario, I learn that Buddy Ebsen is portraying "one of those 'Tobacco Road' people who makes a trip to New Orleans." In fact, Ebsen has traveled over 500 miles to deliver the mail, and the mail consists of one postal card.



BARBARA STANWYCK.

Sitting in the cafe, guzzling beer, is Walter Brennan and his one-man contraption orchestra. But in addition to this orchestra, a trick which will get howls, Brennan plays the banjo. He lugs it about with him, and is intent on playing his favorite song, "St. Louis Blues," when Stanwyck and Joel McCrea are actually married.

The opening scene of the flicker shows Stanwyck and McCrea getting married. And from then on it is a chase. McCrea is mixed up in crime, races out of the wedding, and keeps on the go.

Brennan, with Stanwyck, follows McCrea about, his main purpose being to get the bride and bridegroom together, and then he will strum those "St. Louis Blues."

Finally Brennan gets Stanwyck and McCrea into a cabin, boards it up, and sits outside with his banjo on his knee, strutting himself.

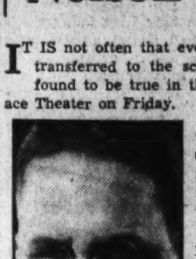
About The Showshops

IT IS not often that even one of the stage's most notable successes is transferred to the screen with such scrupulous fidelity as will be found to be true in the case of "Dodsworth," coming to Loew's Palace Theater on Friday.



BELL.

This was demonstrated to the critical fraternity yesterday afternoon when Samuel Goldwyn's picturization of the Sinclair Lewis fiction, for release through United Artists, was unwound in the projection room of the Twentieth Century-Fox Film Exchange.

Something of the preservation of the stage play's integrity, of course, must be attributed to the fact that Sidney Howard, who dramatized the novel, also fashioned the working script for the picture. Then, too, there is the frequently reported item of Walter Huston's insistence that the picture be played exactly as the stage drama was. Mr. Huston seems to have had his way.

There is, needless to remark, a considerable expansion of scene in the camera version of one of Max Gordon's most successful productions. Scenes have been amplified but not altered. The sequences of events remains the same; Time's odd and unfortunate erosions upon character continue unimpaired; the acting is on a par with the best the play has known. "Dodsworth" still is "Dodsworth," and not a Hollywood counterfeit.

Speaking of the acting, suggests that to these eyes and ears Ruth Chatterton seemed not quite up to the Fay Bainter performance in the early moments of the film. As developments progressed, however, she took complete command of the role of Mrs. Dodsworth and completed her score with so high an average that none can carp at any deficiencies in her portrayal. In the large view, there is none that amounts to anything.

Another interesting question that this picture poses concerns itself with the probable public reception of Mary Astor, who was engaged in making this picture during the precise period of the court trial that resulted in such sensational disclosures.

I can detect no sane reason for heralding Miss Astor's work in this subject with anything but loud huzzas. She is cast in the role of Mrs. Courtright, played in the original stage version by Mrs. Walter Huston, and she does an exquisite job of it.

There have been reports, from time to time, that one watching the course of this picture carefully would be able to detect the sinister effects of the court procedures on Miss Astor's artistry and appearance. I scrutinized every scene minutely yesterday afternoon in a vain endeavor to discover in what respect the Astor performance had been affected by the Astor domestic difficulties. She seemed to me to be at the top of her form throughout every scene in which she appeared.

There will, in the natural course of events, be something a little more analytically detailed in Saturday morning's review of this fine subject. In the meantime, it will suffice to suggest that this be jotted down with "His Brother's Wife" and "Craig's Wife" as something you probably would not be pleased to miss.

Obesity, if that is what it may be called in a friendly and gentlemanly way, apparently has nothing whatever to do with it. I mean to say that several seasons ago, when Alexander Woollcott made his stage debut with Francine Larrimore in S. N. Behrman's "Brief Moment," at the Belasco, one suspected that his contours had something to do with the continuously recumbent attitude in which he played his part.

That, obviously, was an entirely fallacious theory, for Clifton Webb, one of the slenderer and more svelte—if that is the masculine word—of the theater's comedians, now adopts the same somnolent methods in "And Stars Remain," the Guild production current at the National. My present quandary is one of attempting to determine to which of these able gentlemen to tender my apologies for having felt that prostrate art is a lazy man's device.

Mr. Woollcott occurred in the theater so long ago that I presume he need no longer be worried about. For Mr. Webb I have only congratulations

So we will end it there.

The sixth anniversary of the Earle Theater's popular policy of combined screen and stage entertainment of the first rank will be celebrated with a bill of lavish dimensions the week of Friday, October 16, according to announcement made yesterday by John J. Payette, zone manager in charge of Warner Brothers activities in the Washington territory.

The screen feature of the anniversary bill will be "Stage Struck," a gay, new musical celluloid with Dick Powell and Joan Blondell, the newlyweds, in the costellar roles, supported by Warren William, Frank McHugh, Jeanne Madden and The Yacht Club Boys, who are sailing today for London on the Queen Mary, as made known in this space yistiddy.

On the stage, Ina Ray Hutton, that dynamic young blonde, who leads her Melodears with both arms, both feet and her entire torso, will headline a bill that will engage the services of more than 50 first-grade entertainers. I say "first-grade" without thought of, or connotation with, the opening of the school year! Maybe "first rank" would be better.

Quite a history of vaudeville could be written on the six years that the Earle has gone in for this sort of thing. It got off to none too good a start. The story of that period of defeatism is one involving considerations that need not be dragged out into the light at this time. B. F. Keith's was "tops" in vaudeville then and the worst of it was the best the Earle could hope to get—or ever got.

With the coming of inevitable readjustments conditions underwent a practically complete metamorphosis and the Earle has been going like a house on fire ever since, as the saying is.

In all of the six years of the present policy, stage bills have been abandoned only once at the Earle and that was just a few weeks ago when "Anthony Adverse" played the house to record-breaking business and the stage bill was deleted for a period of seven days.

Anne Ford, one of the most helpful of the theater's more erudite publicists, drops a line to say that Ina Claire, Osgood Perkins and the rest of the Theater Guild's "End of Summer" company will arrive in Baltimore from New York this evening to hold a dress rehearsal of the S. N. Behrman play preliminary to the opening of its road tour at Ford's Theater in the Monumental City tomorrow night. Miss Ford clears up another moot question with her customary authority.

When Anne was a recent caller at this desk, we remarked that it would be interesting to know how Miss Claire pronounces her first name—Eyena or Eena. So here is what she says: "Dear Nelson Bell: I told Miss Claire Saturday that we were both concerned about the pronunciation of her name. She said: 'I was named Eyena. That's what my mother and everybody used to call me. But in England and on the continent they call me Eena. Which do I prefer? I like Eena much better because it is softer. The other seems harsh.'"

And that's how it comes about that hereafter Miss Claire will cease to be Eyena in these columns, although I do not know how you are going to tell from the cold type. Of course, you could cut this out and paste it in your hat, or somewhere, but I doubt if you will.

"End of Summer," in passing, opens at the National for a week, beginning Monday night, October 12.

Along with all of the preview screenings of feature pictures that have been going on, there have been interlarded a short subject or two that are worth recommending. One is the governmental scenic-travelogue of St. Thomas, capital of the Virgin Islands, which I have encountered twice under the shifty guidance of Ray Bell—no relation—and the other is Robert Benchley's hilariously lunatic "How to Vote."

Mr. Benchley has made some honeys in his day and also has pulled an occasional floppo. "How to Vote" gets back to the high level of his old-time vaudeville skit of "The Treasurer's Report" and is one of the funniest bits the screen ever has disclosed. Watch for it.

Walter Huston performs the same yeoman's service for the film version of Sinclair Lewis' story of "Dodsworth" as he did for the Sidney Howard dramatization presented on the boards. There is not a hair-line's difference in the two interpretations of the character of Sam Dodsworth, automobile tycoon, trying to learn how to enjoy himself, despite an impossible wife. He finally learns. Mr. Huston and Ruth Chatterton are pictured above, as Mr. and Mrs. Dodsworth, in the picture opening Friday on the screen at Loew's Palace.

The Black Automatic

By William Byron Mowery.

Synopsis

After 13 years with the Canadian Mounted, Inspector Noel Irving, at 33, finds himself without relative, friend, or career. Noel, in his Winnipeg apartment, receives a midnight call from an engaging young stranger, who will only give his name as Jimmy, and who is being pursued by a gang of desperadoes. Noel tells Jimmy of his discharge from the mounted because of dynamiting the hideout of Frank Rocco, master criminal, not knowing two women were with him. Rocco, as a result, becomes a glorified legend, while Noel is disgraced. Jimmy asks Noel to become his partner in a secret prosperous enterprise. Jimmy is shot and killed while telling his story to Noel. Noel and his friend, Sergt. Spencer, search for clues as to Jimmy's identity, but find none.

He climbed back through the window, swearing savagely at himself for having taken Jimmy's assurance that those men had been shaken off. Throughout his talk with Jimmy he had been vaguely uneasy. Now he realized that he should have obeyed his own trained judgment.

He snapped on a light, gathered up his young guest and laid him on the couch.

Riddled by half a dozen bullets, Jimmy was pallid and limp; he was breathing in weak gasps; his shirt, where he had clutched at himself, was sodden with blood.

For all his experiences with crime and death, Noel was badly shaken as he bent over Jimmy, and a mist came to his eyes. His strange young friend, so full of buoyant life a few minutes ago, lying there stricken now, with all the surging vitality shot out of him—it seemed incredible and a little ghastly. He refused to believe that Jimmy could be dying, but the weak pulse, the waxen color of the youngster's face, made him afraid.

Working swiftly, he slipped a cushion under Jimmy's head, loosened his clothes, brushed a straggle of hair from his forehead.

"Jimmy! Who were those men?" he demanded, realizing that he had to pull the youngster back to consciousness and pry a few words out of him or those words might never be spoken. "Where are they from? And you, Jimmy—who are you?"

Jimmy's eyes flickered open, and he stared up at Noel in the groping way of a person sinking into the dark of unconsciousness. His lips moved; he whispered, brokenly:

"The damned—slinkers! They—tagged me—all right—partner——"

At the door of the apartment somebody was pounding and hammering. "Irving! Irving! What the devil happened in here?"

Noel recognized the voice as an apartment neighbor's, a city policeman who lived across the corridor. "Come in, Yates," he bade. And when the man entered, with flashlight and service revolver, Noel jerked a thumb at the phone. "Get Mounted headquarters downtown. Talk to Sergeant Herm Spencer. Tell Spencer that I want him here on the jump. Then call a hospital ambulance. Tell 'em to make it fast. Come alive man!—don't stand there popeyed."

He turned again to the couch and tried desperately to rouse Jimmy. "Jimmy! What's your name, your last name? And those men—who are they?" He shook Jimmy's arm, roughly, for the precious seconds were fleeting. "Don't let go, partner. Talk to me!"

Jimmy did not answer or stir.

Yates came over to the couch. "I got Spencer. He's on the way. The ambulance too." He gazed down at the unconscious Jimmy. "Who is this fellow, Irving?"

"I don't know."

Yates picked up Noel's warm gun from the floor, turned it over in his palm, cleared his throat. "It, uh, wasn't you that shot him, was it?"

"For God's sake, didn't you hear that bang-wanging outside the window? And that laugh, when they saw him fall? I was shooting at those men out there. Bring me some water—a cold towel for his face. He mustn't slip away without talking."

Noel raised his head, listened to the screechy siren that was speeding up the boulevard. When he looked again at Jimmy, he suddenly started, bent closer, felt for a pulse beat, found none. . . .

The Killers Who Laughed.

Yates came back with the towel. "Here." But Noel shook his head, silently, without glancing up.

For a few moments longer he knelt there by the couch, his fingers tightening upon the limp hand of the brave young stranger who had come to him for help and had found death instead. "Jimmy," he muttered, once or twice. And: "They laughed. They killed you and laughed."

As the siren drew near and stopped in front of the apartment building, he stood up, slowly, and turned to Yates.

"Please go out to them," he said. "Tell them that they're not needed here—now."

At the coroner's inquest, the next morning, Noel found himself under suspicion and at bay. In the little courtroom, tense and hushed, he could feel this suspicion beating against him like a hostile wave.

Of the thirty-odd people present—coroner, witnesses, jury, reporters, Superintendent Ostrand, of the mounted, and the curiosity mongers crowded around the walls—no one believed, indeed, that this unknown Jimmy had been killed by the hand of Noel Irving. But upon them all rested the conviction that the former inspector had known Jimmy and the actual killers and was more or less guiltily implicated in the murder of last night.

In the entire room Noel's one defender was the man sitting beside him, Sergt. Herm Spencer, his former subordinate and long time associate on the Secret Squad.

To the inquest and the hostile suspicion Noel paid little attention. As he sat there, cold and aloof, a battle raging within him, a battle which not even Spencer knew anything about.

For hours last night he himself, with Spencer's expert help, had worked on the crime; had worked with infinite patience and in grim earnest; but of Jimmy's identity and secret and of clew to those uncanny shadows, he had discovered exactly nothing.

At the coroner's request Sergt. Spencer stood up to testify. He was brief and trenchant.

Jimmy's Identity a Secret.

"I got there 10 minutes after the shooting. Mr. Irving and I worked till morning on the case. For some reason this young fellow, Jimmy, had wanted to hide his identity. We don't know who he was, where he appeared from or what this 'pot of luck' was that he mentioned, or who those men are or why they hounded and killed him. I can't add one item to the account which Mr. Irving has already given you."

CHAPTER II.

"Jimmy"—he spoke in a sharp whisper—"they're outside, those men. Just outside the window. Don't turn, don't look. For heaven's sake do what I tell you, and quick! If you look, they'll shoot, they'll riddle you. Give that lamp cord a sudden yank, then lunge behind this couch. In the dark we can shoot it out with them."

Instead of obeying him, Jimmy jerked his head around and started at the window. Evidently he saw one of those shadowy forms outside, for he leaped to his feet and defiantly whipped out his gun.

"Get down!" Noel cried at him. "Here—here with me!" Unable to reach the lamp cord in time, he grabbed a footstool and arched it up, to crash it against the light and plunge the room into darkness.

He was a split-second too late. As his arm went back, as Jimmy stood fumbling with the trigger safety of his gun, a spurt of fire leaped from the lilac bush; a pane of glass shattered and fell in bits to the rug; the br-oo-mm of a heavy automatic bellowed in at the window.

From the dark shrubbery a second gun opened up. Through screen, glass and curtain the two automatics poured a hail of bullets at the defiant youngster by the desk. The window curtain twitched crazily. The room was filled with the vicious th-uu-pp and splaat of bullets smashing into the desk and chair and wall beyond.

Oblivious of danger to himself, Noel sprang from behind the shelter of the couch, perked out his automatic and began shooting at those livid flashes, to silence them and save Jimmy.

He heard a help, the cry of a man hard-hit by one of his bullets, but those two guns kept up their murderous blast. As a heavy slug struck the lamp and shattered it, Noel had one anguished glimpse of Jimmy clutching at his breast, collapsing into the chair and then toppling forward to the floor.

Abruptly the blast from the chrubbery stopped. On the heels of the last shot a laugh flounced in through the shattered window—a mocking brutal laugh at the spectacle of Jimmy crumpling and falling.

In the dead quite, broken only by Jimmy's hoarse breathing as he lay there on the rug, Noel heard the swish of brushes, the quick pad-pad of running feet, and it came home to him that those men, after their swoop and deadly strike at Jimmy, were making their getaway.

As the coroner's physician rose to testify and drew the attention of the room, Spencer slipped a little picture from his pocket and cupped it in his palm so that only he and Noel could see it. A tiny faced snapshot, cut to the size and shape of a silver dollar, the picture was the one bit of evidence which they had kept to themselves, for humane reasons.

"Take another look at this, Noel," Spencer whispered. "She might be among this crowd."

"She's not. I've already looked."

"I must say," Spencer commented, "that Jimmy picked a winner for his girl friend. She's downright lovely, Noel."

"His girl friend? Don't jump to conclusions. For all we know, she might be his sister. She resembles him a lot."

"Sister? Did you ever see a fellow carry his sister's picture in his watch case? Neither did I! I'm going to keep an eye on the morgue and on Jimmy's funeral. She might show up."

Noel glanced down again at the tiny photograph; at the black haired beauiful girl looking up at him from the palm of Spencer's hand. She did resemble Jimmy, remarkably. Her hair and eyes were black, like his; her nose and high intelligent forehead seemed feminine counterparts of Jimmy's; the fine glowing vitality about her was like a softened echo of Jimmy's splendid buoyancy.

Spencer proffered him the photograph. "You seem interested. I won't need it any more."

Neol took the picture, crumpled it, tore it to tiny bits; and as Spencer started at him, astonished, he said:

"That picture was dangerous, Herm. To that girl. It might have got away from us and into the papers. It won't now. Whoever she is or whatever her relationship was to Jimmy, I believe she's of decent sort. If you do contact this girl, shield her. Don't let her get dragged through the notoriety of a murder case."

When the last witness had testified, Superintendent Ostrand rose impressively to his feet.

"Mr. Coroner, with your permission I would like to question the, ah, principal witness."

"Certainly, sir. Go right ahead."

Across the table Noel met the gaze of his former commanding officer. As a division head and a man of prestige, Ostrand could have saved him from the Rocco backfire; but the officer had not lifted a hand to still the public clamor. Though a competent enough administrator with long years of service at Ottawa, Ostrand had risen to his high rank chiefly because he was a calculating climber who knew how to pull the right wires, choose the right associates, go to the right church social functions, marry right, and always gauge public opinion right. He blew with the main wind; and he was doing that now, in this little courtroom, across the gun and blood-stained shirt of the dead Jimmy.

"Irving," he said sternly, "after listening carefully to your account and the other evidence, it is my opinion that you are deliberately withholding information vital to this case."

Jury of Males Likes Smartly Tailored Garb

Notable Group Expresses Preference for Black; Glamor for Evening.

By Ethel Ehlen.
The Post Fashion Editor.

THERE HAVE been smart clothes from Paris, London, Hollywood and New York, sponsored by stylists and given a role in the style pageant each season. Period influences, front page news which has made fashion history, the movies and their attendant wardrobe inspiration have all played an important part in this great American pastime. But what about clothes from the standpoint of the man who looks at them? What does he think of the way you dress? Does he prefer dark to bright colors—tailored or fluffy ruffle costumes?

The novel idea was culminated recently and given to the public in a unique fashion show, displaying the type of wardrobe men think chic and appropriate for various occasions. Launched by men and the costumes shown, judged by three prominent males: James Montgomery Flagg, world famous illustrator; David Smart, publisher of Esquire Magazine, and Bill Tilden, tennis champion (for the outdoor viewpoint). The jury voted to a man for the new high necklines—those which fit close around the throat like a necklace. The present vogue for black they also indorsed—black according to their estimation being the smartest color for either daytime or evening.

Understand Good Tailoring.

If you want to receive continuous applause from men be sure and have a variety of smartly simple frocks and suits in your wardrobe each season. Why do men like to see women in tailored clothes? The male says, "he can't understand women, but he does understand good tailoring." It is obvious from this statement that clothes in this category should be well-tailored, to please the critical masculine eye.

When he takes you to luncheon in a smart club or hotel, according to the fastidious jury named here, he would like you to appear in a swank black suit with a voluminous black fur collar. The accessories black, and the blouse one of "those dazzling affairs of hammered lame"—with the inevitable high neckline. Or, if the little woman prefers a bit of color for a change from the constant black, then, he advises, choose a suit of the lovely coronation blue trimmed with Persian lamb; completed with black accessories.

For business costumes all men prefer black, just as they admire good tailoring. The new swing skirts, slim waistlines and broad shoulders, they agree, are the epitome of chic designing. All black, with a bit of discreetly selected jewelry, or a touch of white or interesting color contrast (perferably blue), is the perfect attire for the office, say noted business men! Hats, with the popular high crowns, if they are becoming, and sleek coats with fur collars (that look warm and cozy), have the discriminating male's approval.

Warm Costume for Outdoors.

When invited to a football game or polo match these frosty fall days be sure and wear an outfit that is as smart-appearing as it is warm and comfortable. Men don't like to see women at these out-of-door games, looking the essence of chic and shivering from the cold; neither do they want to escort someone whose idea of spectator sports dressing is to look like a Girl Scout. A good looking frock expressing the latest ideas of the mode, topped by an equally swank coat of heavy woolen, fur-trimmed, will not only be admired at the game but will be appropriate for informal dining and dancing in town afterward.

Formal evening gowns, according to the fastidious male, should be simple, of shimmering material and high of neckline. There is both glamour and a touch of the siren in such a frock, they contend!

Here's the Masculine Idea of Chic

Broad shoulders and fitted lines, neatly tailored feature the smart black frock below. For luncheon or cocktails a black suit and accessories with high-necked blouse of lame. Men prefer black for all occasions. They claim they can't understand women, but do understand good tailoring—hence their unanimous approval of simplicity.

Both costumes from "March of Fashion" — judged by James Montgomery Flagg, David Smart and Bill Tilden.

Can Continentals Make Better Soup? Recipes to Decide

Can you make an appetizing and distinctive soup—one that hits the spot on a crisp fall day? If so, enter your recipe in The Post's contest this week.

Continentals hold that the test of a good cook is the soup she can make. American housewives are said to be weak on soups. Send in your recipe and prove that soup-making is not an unknown art in this country.

Cash prizes will be awarded as follows: Five dollars for the best recipe, $3 for the second prize and $1 for each of the three next in line.

Recipes should be typed or neatly written in ink. Each contestant is limited to one recipe. Send your recipes to reach the Home Economics Editor of The Post not later than Saturday morning.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Oct. 6.

IF AN EASTWARD crossing of the Atlantic in the off season has all the giddy gayety of a lying-in-state, the return trip in late September is the last screaming word in glamour, chi-chi and general uproar.

ALICE HUGHES.

The hullabaloo began at Waterloo with the departure of the boat train. Beautiful women, handsome men and the rest of us showed, screamed, counted baggage and battled our way into the British Pullmans, which are only a succession of tea tables. A dozen photographers fired bulbs at the young and handsome Earl of Warwick, off to Hollywood for films (of whom more later), while great stage and screen stars, past and current, flounced and pouted prettily. There were enough orchids on the gals to outfit ten gangster's funerals—Alice Delysia, vet French revue star, staggered under the weigth of at least a dozen.

Then Southampton, and a tender trip far down Southampton Water, where we lay in the darkness and chill for an hour awaiting the arrival of the noble Normandie. At last she loomed up out of the blackness, all alight, huge and thrilling in the dark of the night. She had scooped 1,500 people out of Europe—among the last of the summer's great traveling army—and she picked up her skirts and stepped out across the sea at a spanking 29 knots. A glorious and comfortable canoe, of whom the French are justly proud—overgarish in her public rooms, but marvelous in her service and cabin appointments. And I got lost in the first half-hour and was only rescued by my spouse, with guides, searchlights and whistles.

GIRL ABOUT THE NORMANDIE—Well-known names and faces promenade the ship—the indestructibly lovely Ina Claire — slim, pretty, chic in her mid-forties and ever willing to surrender mere prettiness to true smartness. Her blonde locks are now in the new roll, and the second night out she dined and danced in a black gown with a dark sequin jacket, chic to a degree. Best-dressed girl on the boat, beyond question.

• • • •

A pleasant half-hour chat with the really beautiful Earl of Warwick (of whom still more still later, for he's a subject, girls!) . . . Kirsten Flagstad, suddenly world-famous in opera after 40—big, blonde, placid, sweet-faced . . . A delightful luncheonn with the great P. G. Wodehouse, papa of "Jeeves," "Freddy Threepwood" and the rest, and his attractive wife, "Plummy," as his wife calls him, is off to Hollywood again to write films—his first visit since '31. Wodehouse is big, stocky bald, handsome and as charming a man as I've ever met.

• • • •

Dinner in the grill (the ship's ultimate appeal to the "exclusive" impulse) with Raymond Loewy, noted Franco-American industrial designer, and his sparkling blonde wife—a Nebraska girl who was educated in France, and now queens it over homes on Park avenue and in a Parisian suburb. There were six pheasants on the boat—and we tore one of them limb from limb.

• • • •

Two travel hunches: Judge a boat by the number of ping-pong tables on the promenade deck. The Normandie has four—no doubt, tying the Queen Mary. And any ship that dishes out to the customers the wonderful Roger & Gallet carnation soap is some tug—and this one does! . . . M. Villar, most famous of pursers and the man who can turn on colossal charm like a spigot, giving cocktails to Mrs. Vincent Astor, the fiery Jose Laval (daughter of the late French premier) and her young husband, the Comte de Chambrun . . .

• • • •

The stupendous pride of the French personnel when we passed the grand old Berengaria as though she were standing still . . . People, people—Floyd Gibbons on his way home from Spain; the noted Dr. Alexis Carrel, whose "Man, the Unknown" is a huge seller; Bobby Woolsey, the screen comic; Bobby Ripley, who believes practically everything . . . Lights, music, camera!

• • • •

The Normandie "gala" was like all such affairs—a lot of willing workers, but no great headliners. I had hopes that La Belle Ina would recite and that Flagstad would at least give out one verse and a chorus of "Mother Machree," but no. I still say that the best thing about a ship's gala is a jug of champagne in the smoking room afterward!

PLEASANT HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

THEIR WEDDING was the talk of the town last June, and they spent the summer on a very high-brow honeymoon, paid for by their papas. Now they're back home settling down on their own with a job for him and the dishes for her. They're adoring it and having the greatest time fixing up their new house.

It's going to be pretty looking but quite smart, too. The living room furniture is mahogany, nicely detailed, and the walls are painted in a pinky beige. The draperies are just the same shade of beige in a textured material, and the rug is plum color, also textured. They've chosen a novelty mohair for their sofa that is both interesting to look at and substantial as to wear. The chairs are all in a figured material that picks up some of the tones used about the room and adds flashes of creamy white.

Jade bases for the lamps touch up the room as a lipstick touches up a lady . . . then creamy white shades, creamy white accessories, a few odd pieces of brass.

In their bedroom they're having walnut furniture, ivory walls, a figured rug that's mostly blue, draperies in a flowered material on an ivory ground, a bedstead to match, chairs in maroon and accessories in blue. The thing we like best about this room is the arrangement . . . it's rectangular in shape, so that they could place the bed at one end and have practically a square of floor space left over, which makes such a luxurious amount of room to roam in. To say nothing of leaving ample space for easy chairs, which we think is important in a bedroom.

Today's HEALTH TALK

'Hands Off' Body Reactions.

Our feeling of well-being depends to a large extent upon how our digestive laboratories handle the foods that we force upon them. We know that the diet must be balanced else we would develop some deficiency disease as scurvy, rickets, or pellagra. Nevertheless, there are tens of thousands of us who are pursuing a food regime which, while well cooked and adequate in amount (heat value), lacks some minor element for complete efficiency. We are likely to confine our eating to dishes of which we are particularly fond.

From our studies on life sustaining materials we have learned that certain of them react as acids and others as alkalis, and we must never take so much of either as to upset the delicate chemical balance of the body. We know also that each of us possesses an alkali reserve which we cannot lose—that is, much of it—without danger to life.

Whenever we engage in activity of any sort—make muscles work—we produce a small amount of acid. The feeling of fatigue that follows overwork comes largely because lactic acid in the muscles has accumulated more rapidly than it can be washed out. As a routine procedure the blood will pick up these chemical particles—acids—and combine them with alkalis so that they will be neutralized. They are thus rendered innocuous and are excreted via the skin, the bowel, and the urine. But if we use up alkalis in this manner we must replace them, and this is done through food. If we fail in this respect we may develop acidosis.

Acidosis Rare.

But what a senseless hullabaloo has been raised by the "acid" faddist. One may safely venture the assertion that not one person in 50,000 needs to take alkaline drugs. A modest amount of milk, fruit, and fresh vegetables daily will supply the necessary material. We must remember that the body is in danger when it receives more of this substance than it needs. In fact, the condition known as alkalosis is more common than acidosis. Many of us think of oranges, lemons, grapefruit, etc., as acids. The reverse is true, as they form alkalis in the system.

There are a few diseases in which acidosis may be important, such as diabetes, acute inflammation of the kidney, and sometimes pernicious anemia, liver disease, etc. In acute digestive upsets, when vomiting and diarrhea are draining the body of salts, alkalis may be called for. In such an emergency salt solution provides a valuable remedy.

Hazards Lurk In Odd Places For Children

Small Umbrella in One Instance Led to Crossing Accident.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

FOR HER SIXTH birthday Mary was presented with a small umbrella. It was her first, and gave her a sense of dignity out of all proportion to its size. The one ambition of her life was to use it, and to use it where it could be seen.

Parading up and down the front walk or even on the sidewalk in front of the house was not enough. She wanted to be seen in town or arriving at school with an umbrella over her just like a grown person.

The first rainy day Mary, all excitement, got it out, and started off to school beside her mother, proudly displaying her new possession. She was in the habit of coming home from school alone, since it was only a short distance and there was always a policeman at the corner of the main thoroughfare.

But Mary's mother had forgotten a side street and Mary's new encumberance. To manage an umbrella requires concentration when one is small, and the slope of the umbrella hides the view. Furthermore, a breeze had sprung up, which added to the difficulties. At the corner Mary failed to see a car which was coming, and in the middle of the road she was held up by the umbrella's antics. The result was another accident listed in the daily papers.

Waterproof and rubbers or arctics afford a child far better protection than an umbrella. As far as the child's safety goes they are far preferable. The fewer distractions a child has when he is negotiating traffic, the better. A child has a single track mind.

What he is interested in absorbs his entire attention and the world about him is for the moment non-existent. Care should be taken that when he is on the street and especially when he is crossing a thoroughfare he should have nothing to consider but his own safety.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

'Please Help Me Get Him,' Writes Girl of Older Man She Met on Vacation and Thinks She Loves.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have a problem I am anxious for you to help me solve. I met a man this summer while on vacation in whom I am deeply interested. I saw him only about two hours at the time of our meeting, but he took my name and address and later sent me a card. After a week, he came to Washington to visit relatives and called on me twice while here, staying only a short time. He said I was a charming young woman and he could make me very happy, and I know he could. But I think he was just trying his compliments on me. He asked me to kiss him, which I did. Then he left.

• • • •

I did not hear from him again until today, but he explained he had been busy during the seven weeks' interval, and since he is a business man, I believe him. He told me all he had been doing since his visit here and asked me to excuse his silence, saying he knew I would sympathize because he had been so busy with all the mail that had piled up in his absence. He said he would be looking for a letter every day. Does he mean answers to letters from him, or does he expect me to take the initiative in writing to him every day?

• • • •

I think I am in love with him, but I don't want to show my feelings, so what shall I do? Shall I tell him just how I feel toward him or wait until he commits himself? He has been married and has two or three children, but that doesn't stop me from loving him. He says his wife is dead. He signs his letters, "Affectionately, Joseph." How should I sign mine? And just how should I start my letters? Should I say "Dear Joseph," or "My Dear Joseph," or "Dear Mr. So-and-So?"

I want this man badly, but I do want to be careful, so please help me to get him. He says he is overworked. Shall I tell him how sorry I am for him? There is more than a thousand miles between us. I am 25 years old and he is much older, but I like older men, those around 38 or 40. Please help me. CAROLYN.

Clutching at Straw.

DEAR CAROLYN: If ever I came across a woman grasping at straws in the way of attention from a given man, you are that woman. Either the man must be one of the most fascinating representatives of his sex who ever lived, or your are in inordinate panic about annexing a beau—or is it a husband?

• • • •

In writing him, salute him as you address him in ordinary conversation. If you call him "Mr. So and So," use that name in beginning your letter. If you have progressed to first-name terms, use his first name. Omit the "my" in either case. In the first place, he isn't "your" Joseph—yet—and in the second place, a man is only saluted as "My dear Mr. So and So" in formal correspondence, business or social. And I take it whatever correspondence is exchanged here will be more chatty and conversational than formal. Sign your letters "Sincerely" or "Sincerely yours."

• • • •

It is my belief that the more interesting you make your letters in the way of chat, comment, narration and description, while keeping the personal element out of them, the better they will be received by the addressee. Don't for heaven's sake tell him by letter or in person that you are in love with him after so short an acquaintance and so little encouragement. You probably aren't, as a matter of fact. You are simply feeling a lovelorn woman's emotional response to the first man who has paid her any gallant attention in a long time. You are hungering to love and be loved, and are spilling over on the first handy object.

• • • •

Don't tell him you are sorry he is so overworked. That's being unwarrantedly wifely and material under the circumstances. He's probably just trying to impress you with his terrific importance in the economic scheme of things and with the great responsibilities which are his in whatever position he holds. He doesn't want your pity. He probably wants your awed respect, if he cares twopence about what you think. It's just possible he made up the story to excuse his past—and possible future—failures to write. Maybe he spends most of his time sitting on the small of his back with his feet on the desk. He can't be much of a whirlwind if it takes him seven weeks to clear away mail which accumulated during a vacation leave.

• • • •

Don't write every day if he doesn't set the pace first, and even then I think it would be best to limit yours to about one to every three of his. If he writes irregularly, give him an irregular response, spacing your replies about as he does his. With 1,000 miles between you, you haven't much to hope for in "getting" him. You'd have to be a very remarkable letter writer to do it. And remarkable letter writers are usually persons of remarkable spirit, personality, taste and intelligence, whose letters reflect these characteristics. M. H.

Spain's New Ambassador Once a Teacher in U. S.

De los Rios, Called One of Europe's Foremost Orators, Arrives in New York Aboard Ile de France; Once Represented Madrid in Geneva.

By Dudley Harmon.

A former lecturer on jurisprudence at Columbia University arrived in New York yesterday on the Ile de France prepared to play a new and different role as Spain's Ambassador to this country. The envoy, Senor Don Francisco de los Rios, accompanied by his wife, was met by the Charge d'Affaires, Senor Don Enrique de la Casa.

The arrival of a recently appointed diplomat always causes much speculation in Washington, especially when he represents a country as much in the limelight as Spain. Is he young, or middle-aged? Has he a wife and children? Will he entertain frequently? Is he quiet, gay, serious or frivolous?

The new Ambassador is in his fifties and is said to have a charming personality, in addition to being one of the foremost intellectuals of Spain. Spaniards who have heard him address the Cortes, where he was a deputy from Madrid, say he is one of the most gifted speakers in Europe. He once sat in the hall of the League of Nations in Geneva as Spain's representative and also has served his country as minister of state.

A leading authority on law, the Ambassador visited this country several years ago to deliver lectures at Columbia. In his spare moments he enjoys delving into the forklore of Andalusia, his native province, and has made quite a collection of its songs and stories.

Speaking of Spain, the rumor of Senor Ramon Padilla's death, like that of Mark Twain, seems to have been greatly exaggerated. The former Second Secretray of the Embassy here is safe in San Sebastian, after going through some hair-raising experiences, about which he has written his friend, Senor Luis Olivares, former First Secretary of the Embassy.

The same good fortune has followed the other members of Senor Padilla's family, who are well known in Washington, as the head of the house was once ambassador here. His father, his two sisters, and his brother were held as hostages in San Sebastian. They escaped harm when they were released through intervention of foreign diplomats who had fled to Hendaye. Senor Padilla fought with the rebels in several battles but seems to have come through it all without a scratch.

The few remaining members of the "old guard" at the embassy will be reinforced late this month, when the Agricultural Attache and Senora de Echagaray are due to arrive from Europe, with their young son Mike. They were on the Atlantic vacation bound when the revolution broke out earlier in the summer.

Elizabeth Marston Selects Attendant For Her Wedding

Miss Elizabeth Worthington Marston, daughter of Col. and Mrs. John Marston, who will be married October 28 to Capt. John Seymour Letcher, has selected Mrs. Thomas Harrison Shepard, of Washington, as her only attendant. The ceremony will be performed in St. Alban's Church and will be followed by a reception at the home of the bride's parents on California street.

Capt. Charles G. Paul, of Richmond, Va., the uncle of Capt. Letcher, will be best man.

Baptist Cleric Soon Will Wed Grace Newton

Engagement of Rev. Murray Announced by Former Secretary to Hoover.

An engagement of much interest to Washington is that of Miss Grace Newton, daughter of the former Representative from Minnesota and Mrs. Walter H. Newton, to the Rev. Philip G. Murray, of Washington, son of Mr. and Mrs. George R. Murray, of Staten Island, N. Y., which has been announced by her parents.

Representative Newton served in Congress from 1919 to 1928, when he resigned to become secretary to President Hoover. At the close of the Hoover Administration, he and his family, with the exception of Miss Newton, returned to their former home in Minneapolis.

The bride-to-be remained in the Capital. She attended George Washington University and is a member of Alpha Delta Pi Sorority. Three years ago she christened the cruiser Minneapolis.

Mr. Murray, who is assistant minister at Calvary Baptist Church, has been in Washington four years and is leaving soon to assume the pastorate of Park Baptist Church, in St. Paul, Minn. His call to this pastorate at this time is responsible for the wedding being set for an earlier date than had originally been planned.

Miss Newton is now busy making preparation to leave for Minnesota the first of November and will be married at the home of her parents in Minneapolis the middle of the month.

Mr. Murray is a graduate of Bucknell University and Colgate-Rochester Seminary.

Winifred Kohle Becomes Bride

Married in Eldbrook Church to Charles Sebastian, Jr., of Washington.

Miss Winifred Kohler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Kohler, was married at 8 o'clock last evening to Mr. Charles Sebastian, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sebastian, of Washington. The ceremony took place at the Eldbrook Methodist Episcopal Church, with the Rev. Walter Michael officiating.

The bride had as her matron of honor Mrs. Wilmer Balderson, who wore a frock of fuschia moire and a Juliet cap and carried talisman roses. The bridesmaids were Mrs. Ben Dyer and Miss Elizabeth Brooks, who wore gowns of green moire and Juliet caps, and Mrs. James McGlaherty and Miss Rosamund Hunt, who wore gold moire and similar caps. All the bridesmaids carried bouquets of chrysanthemums.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. Her white satin gown was fashioned on princess lines with a long train and her veil was held by clusters of orange blossoms. She carried a spray of white roses and lilies of the valley.

Mr. Allen Wirts was best man and the ushers were Mr. Ralph Graves, Mr. Ben Dyer, Mr. Wilmer Balderson and Mr. Elmer Gladmon.

After a reception at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Sebastian left for New York. On their return they will reside at 4610 Brookfield drive, Westhaven, Md.

Miss Nelda May Is Wed To A. Price Kingsolver

Mrs. Hattie May, of Richmond, Va., has announced the marriage of her daughter Miss Nelda May, to Mr. A. Price Kingsolver, of Arlington, Va., son of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Kingsolver, Arlington, which took place in St. Paul's Chapel, in Baltimore, Monday. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Arthur B. Kingsolver, a relative of the bridegroom.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her cousin, Mr. Nathan Mathewson, and her maid of honor was Miss Elizabeth Kingsolver.

Harris & Ewing.

MRS. REBECCA LIPSCOMB WHITE, who will be remarried soon to her former husband, Capt. Thomas Dresser White, from whom she was divorced in 1935. Capt. White is assistant military attache of the American Embasay in Rome, where their marriage will take place. She and her 5-year-old daughter, Becky Ann, have sailed for Italy and the ceremony will be performed immediately on their arrival. Mrs. White is the daughter of Mrs. Blaine Lipscomb, of Washington, with whom she has been residing at the Shoreham.

The Merry Whirl

By MARYLYN.

Now that the troops are back from weeks spent in the wilderness, Fort Myer is picking up in excitement. Beginning Thursday there will be formal guard mounts and parades at 4:45 o'clock.

George Millholland no sooner gets back than he starts making plans for an extended trip in Pennsylvania. Kiko, his "college" dog is going to be entered in the Harrisburg dog show in the obedience class, and having had the opportunity to see this well trained animal run through his repetoire of tricks, we know that he will troop off with highest honors and make all competitors seem like carved statues.

Saw the James McMillan Gibsons the other evening, the first time since summer. She, the former Patience McCormack-Goodhart, was wearing a most becoming frock of leaf green satin. It was designed with a very full flaring skirt and high bateau back.

There are two engagements in the offing that will be a bit of a jolt to society here. One concerns a young person who has been one of the real belles of the Capital, and the other is that of a young diplomat, a secretary at one of the embassies, who is tall, dark and handsome and famous for his dancing. Think long enough and you will probably come to the correct solutions.

Mrs. Charles Council is one of those persons who concoct rare delicacies and when asked for the recipe smiles and says, "Oh, a couple of cups of this, a spoon or two of that and so on, then you mix it up until it seems right——"

Minnigerode, Allen Bridal To Be Friday

St. Margaret's Church Nuptials to Follow Original Plans.

Miss Helen Louise Minnigerode, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Carter Minnigerode, of Washington, will be married Friday at noon at St. Margaret's Church to Mr. Frederick H. Allen, of New York City. The Rev. Dr. Herbert Scott Smith, rector, who was the officiating clergyman at the marriage of her parents, will perform the ceremony, and all plans for her wedding will be carried out as they were originally made.

Announcement that Miss Minnigerode and Mr. Allen had been wed in a civil ceremony in New York City, Monday, caused some confusion to friends who expected to be among the guests at her marriage here on Friday. The necessity for obtaining a passport in order to sail for Europe the night of the wedding was the only reason for the civil ceremony, however. The bride has not altered in any way her plans for a church service, with her sister, Miss Virginia Minnigerode, as maid of honor, and four friends as bridesmaids. The wedding will take place at high noon and her other attendants will be Mrs. Carleton Smith, of Worcester, Mass.; Mrs. G. Ewald Menzel, of Englewood, N. J.; Miss Frances Hill, of Washington, and Miss Anna Lemingwell Morse, of New York.

Recipes of Old Dominion Treasured as Historical

Virginians Boast of Dishes Created in Their State—Some Are Identified With Particular Tastes of Persons Notable in United States Annals.

By Elisabeth E. Poe.

THE SONS and daughters of Virginia, wherever they may roam, take with them vivid memories of the special viands peculiar to the Old Dominion. Statesmen of the early days, turned from the consideration of public problems to indulge their hospitality by presenting laden tables for the delight of their guests.

While not a gourmand in any sense of the word, Thomas Jefferson was an epicure of parts. During his residence in France he learned many culinary secrets and he put them to good use when he returned. Het was especially interested in edible plants and vegetables, and brought home a collection of seeds, planted them at Monticello and enriched the vegetable supply of the Old Dominion with many edible plants, then strange and rare, now familiar in every household in the Nation.

Among the recipes he gathered was one for what he called "French ice cream." Ice cream or frozen pudding had been served, first in America, so it is said, at the table of Mrs. Martha Washington. But Jefferson found in Paris another form of the delicacy and soon the cooks at Monticello were kept busy preparing it.

When he left the classic precincts of Monticello to become third President of the United States Thomas Jefferson took with him his Virginia ideas of abundant hospitality.

Adams Menus Reformed.

The White House table which had presented the plain cookery of New England under President John Adams and his good wife Abigail Adams was replete now with famed dishes from the Old Dominion.

An eye witness at a dinner at the White House during Jefferson's Administration gives us a glimpse of the menu. Today it would be considered enough food for a week of meals.

Among the things served were soup, boiled fish, canvas back ducks, pheasants with ham, turkey and partridges as what were called "side dishes," mutton chops, sweetbreads, a macaroni pie, an oyster pie. On the vegetable side of the menu were salsify, cauliflower, the seeds imported by Mr. Jefferson from abroad and raised at Monticello, while ice creams, fruits, custards, blanc mange, cakes and sugar plums satisfied the desire for sweets. With this meal were served French and Italian wines from the Monticello cellars as well as Madeira and a "sweet ladies" wine.

Fish, game and fruits have ever been plentiful in Virginia. The settlers at Jamestown in the famine days found the largesse of the sea a large source of food supply.

Chief among the sea foods cherished by Virginians are oysters, crabs and shrimp. It is from Virginia that the world has learned of the delicacy known as soft-shell crabs. The hard-shell crab has its place, too, but a true Virginia cook is only satisfied with the soft-shell variety. She prepares them as follows:

Brunswick Stew.

1 frying chicken (2 to 2½ pounds)
2 onions
3 cups water
3 tomatoes, peeled and quartered
½ cup sherry
2 tablespoons butter
½ cup bread crumbs
2 teaspoons sauce
1 pound fresh lima beans
Salt, pepper
½ cup green okra
3 ears green corn

Brown the onion in the bacon grease; then add the chicken, which has been cut in small pieces and seasoned. When chicken is done, pour off the grease and put chicken and onions in a dutch oven. Add the water, tomatoes, the sherry wine and sauce. Cook slowly for half an hour, then add the lima beans, okra and corn cut from the cob. Let simmer one hour. Then add the butter and bread crumbs and cook half an hour longer.

If you are fortunate enough to obtain an uncooked Smithfield ham, there is only one way in which to prepare it if you wish to retain its distinctive flavor. Smithfield ham is known at kings' tables and nowadays it is perhaps Virginia's most favored food product.

Game Pie.

Take the flesh of a hare and cut it into pieces the length of a finger. Take the same weight of pheasant or chicken or partridge mixed without fat or skin. Take 1½ pounds of sausage meat and mix with the finely chopped liver of the hare. Put pepper, salt, a little thyme, one bay leaf and a thin layer of stuffing at the bottom of a large game pie-dish. Put in the pieces of hare, veal, game, a slice of ham and a layer of stuffing, pressing down so that no spaces are left. Repeat till full, adding pepper, salt, thyme and a bay leaf. Pour over the whole a tumblerful of water and two tablespoons of brandy. Cover and close with paper so that it is hermetically sealed. Place in the oven for four hours.

To accompany such a dish old-fashioned Virginians liked hot buttered pieces of hoecake cooked among the embers of wide open fireplaces in the kitchens separate in most places from the plantation house. The plantation cooks made the hoecake according to this general plan, although the true Southern cook, particularly colored cooks, always display a certain contempt for written recipes:

Preferred Recipe.

1¾ cups boiling water
½ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon shortening

Sift meal and salt together, add boiling water, stirring until well mixed. Heat iron griddle on top of stove, put in shortening. When very hot, turn in mixture, flatten with back of spoon to smooth cake. Cook brown on one side, then turn and brown other side.

In the Virginia of yesterday every Sunday morning saw a procession of house boys tray laden leaving the manor houses in errands of hospitality bent. On the trays were portions of hot Brunswick stew, a favorite Sunday breakfast dish, accompanied by the flakiest of hot rolls being sent to friends as a courtesy of the season. Only a Virginian can really make that stew. In the hands of all others it loses its priceless flavor.

The only thing new about the present recipe are the tomatoes, formerly called "love apples" south of Mason and Dixon's line, which were added to the dish after the War. Between the States and tomatoes first came into general use as a vegetable.

This is the way it was and is made:

Recipe for Ham.

Soak a 10 or 12 pound Smithfield ham for 12 hours, then boil, cooking very slowly for four to five hours, until tender. Cool in its own essence. When cold, remove the skin and make criss-cross gashes in the top of the ham with a sharp knife. Sprinkle on top of ham two tablespoons of cracker dust, two tablespoons of brown sugar, and sprinkle lightly with pepper. Stick the ham with whole cloves. A wineglass of sherry sprinkled over the top of the ham will greatly improve the flavor. Bake in a hot oven for 20 minutes until brown. Garnish with watercress and parsley.

Plantation barons along the Potomac developed a method of cooking the succulent shad with which that historic stream abounds in the early spring that was borrowed from the Indian settlers of old. Of course, the method has been modified, but on general principles it is much the same as when Powhatan and his mighty warriors roamed as far north as Anacostia and caught the sprightly Potomac shad in its spring habitats.

The Indians substituted goose or other grease for butter, of course, and they had no pepper, parsley or lemon. But they knew the herbs of the field and the lore of herbdom and no doubt had similar plants with which to make the shad even more tasty.

Fried Soft-Shell Crabs.

Secure live soft-shell crabs. Remove spongy part or "dead man" from crabs by lifting up both sides and removing little gray-looking "fingers" or pieces. Wash and dry well, season with salt and pepper, put on ice if not ready to serve. When ready to fry, dip each crab separately in flour, then in beaten egg, then roll in fine, well-seasoned bread crumbs or cracker meal until well coated. Fry quickly in hot fat until crisp and golden brown, about 6 minutes. Serve on a hot platter, garnish with hot fried parsley and lemon slices. Sprigs of parsley may be dropped in same fat in which crabs were fried.

The New England custom of eating pie for breakfast is regarded as dietary heresy in Virginia, but in keeping with the tradition of English ancestry a prime dish on an Old Dominion menu for any meal is game pie.

One recipe which has persisted through generations follows:

Mrs. Willett's recipe will appear on the Saturday food page of The Post.

NLRB Upheld in Ruling Requiring W. V. & M. Co. to Take Men Back.

A Federal court in Virginia yesterday upheld the National Labor Relations Board in a ruling that restored to their jobs 18 employes of the Washington, Virginia & Maryland Coach Co., who allegedly were discharged last spring for union affiliation.

The United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals at Richmond held the act under which the labor board operates constitutional as it affects interstate commerce, but, the Associated Press reported, decided in another case that the law is invalid when applied to intrastate commerce.

Both opinions were handed down by Judge Morris A. Soper, of Baltimore, and in both cases alleged interference by employers with union activities of employes was involved.

The bus company operates principally between the Capital and nearby Virginia towns. Its principal owner is Leon Arnold. The company's repair shops are in Clarendon.

The ruling against the constitutionality of the labor act was taken in the board's action against the Foster Brothers Manufacturing Co., a Baltimore furniture concern.

The court held intrastate limitations on Congressional action applied to prescribing "conditions to which employer and employes must conform when they negotiate" as well as to hours and wages.

The board was held without authority, however, to exercise similar supervision over Foster Brothers Manufacturing Co., Inc., a Maryland corporation making bedsprings, day beds and other furniture at Baltimore.

After citing opinions in the NRA, Guffey coal and other decisions, Judge Morris A. Soper said in his opinion in the Foster case:

"The Supreme Court has declared * * * that however commendable the purpose may be, Congress may not legislate with regard to local manufacture or production, and it seems obvious that this ruling must be respected not only with regard to the direct regulation by Federal law of wages and hours of work in such industry, but also with regard to a statute designed to affect these matters substantially by prescribing the conditions to which employers and employes must conform when they negotiate and enter into contracts of employment.

"This conclusion becomes inevitable when we observe that the powers conferred upon the board to effectuate the policies of the act authorize the board to order an employer, who has been guilty of unfair labor practices, as defined in the act, to cease and desist therefrom and to reinstate discharged employes with or without back pay.

"A more direct or intimate control of local business by Federal authority it is difficult to imagine."

Roosevelt a 'Receding' 3-2 Favorite, New York Betting Commissioner Says

By Shirley Povich,
Sports Editor of The Post.

New York, Oct. 6.—Broadway's Jack Doyle affixed a pair of gold-rimmed spectacles to his nose, withdrew from his wallet a list of figures, and unburdened himself today of a grist of observations anent the coming Presidential election.

No politician is Jack Doyle. But he is Broadway's No. 1 betting commissioner. He, too, is the perfect antithesis of the popular conception of what a bookmaker looks like.

No slanting derby, but a conservative fedora is his choice in hats. No elks-tooth watch charm dangles on a paunchy breast. He speaks with meticulous diction. At 60, white-haired, he is a man of native dignity, professorial of mien, and soft of voice.

Receding Favorite.

This man it is, then, who takes a circumspect look at the pre-election alignment and announces:

"Roosevelt is a receding favorite. Landon money is beginning to show and the odds against the Republican nominee have been hammered down to 3 to 2. That is what I am offering."

No novice as a quoter of odds on Presidential elections is Broadway's No. 1 betting commissioner. Since 1896 he has been accepting wagers on Presidential campaigns. Without a trace of braggadocio he says he is a keen student of politics.

"I have to be," declared Doyle. "It is my own money I am risking when I lay odds. I cannot afford to overlook any of the issues, any of the trends. Politics, with its many ramifications, is a far different betting proposition than a sporting event.

1936 Election Interesting.

"And the 1936 election is probably the most interesting of any I remember, and my dealing with political wagers goes back to the McKinley-Bryan campaign of 1896—the most interesting and perhaps the least predictable.

"Today we have such a profuseness of issues. Virtually every other campaign beginning with McKinley's election was decided on one big issue. Then it was free silver. In 1912, with Bull Moose splitting the Republican Party and thus electing Wilson, it was tariff and trusts.

"Four years later, when Wilson ran against Hughes, it was the cry of 'Wilson kept us out of war.' In '20, Harding won because Wilson was wedded to the League of Nations and voters were led to believe the United States would be forced to keep an armed guard in every European country.

"In 1924, Coolidge capitalized on the country's prosperity and the Democrats were tainted by a prohibition repeal element. In '28, with Al Smith a candidate, the religious issue decided the election. In '32, during the depression, the country simply demanded a change.

"But today, look at the issues. There is no one big question on which the election will hinge. There are, probably, 20 issues—complicated by the strength of the Lemke party in doubtful States. It is the labor question in New York, the agrarian policy in the Midwest, increased taxes, inflation, relief appropriations, radicalism and a slew of other important phases.

"The Pacific Coast I concede to Roosevelt. New England is most certainly Landon. The South again will be solidly Democratic, but Roosevelt is no better than even money in 14 States, with results in New York, Pennsylvania, Iowa, Illinois, Ohio and Indiana likely to decide the election.

"And that speech of Al Smith's here the other evening does not figure to enhance Roosevelt's chances here. Smith is still a power among New York's voters and can, conceivably, swing the State into the Republican column.

Too Many Possibilities.

"Never in my memory has a Presidential election favorite been beaten, but this is a different kind of election. The variety of issues offers up too many possibilities."

In straw votes, Doyle revealed he had never placed any faith, preferring to fix his odds from his own observations.

"And I'll tell you why," he added. "Until this American Institute of Public Opinion conducted its poll, straw votes were not representative of the voters. They usually reached only one class of voters—those who could afford or were inclined to subscribe to publications of heavy contents, or strictly the organized labor classes who were reached through their chieftains' ballots.

"No scientific cross-section poll of American voters was ever taken in a straw ballot until this year and I am awaiting with great curiosity the result of the Institute of Public Opinion sample ballots. It's a new idea, and logical enough.

Straw Vote on Trains.

"I'll never forget a straw vote they took in New York before the 1916 election. Some newspaper thought it would be a novel idea to interrogate all the passengers on all trains arriving at Grand Central and Penn stations.

"Of course, it was no true barometer. They forgot that usually it is only persons of means who travel. But anyway, each day's count was kept. The poll showed, usually, 80 per cent for Hughes, 20 per cent for Wilson; or 78 per cent for Hughes, 22 per cent for Wilson, or approximate figures.

"I watched them take the poll one day, then sauntered out to the railroad yard where I met an old gate-tender. He had been reading about the poll and was not surprised at the figures.

"'Yeah,' he said skeptically. 'But remember, the gravel train don't come in here.'"

U. S. Agents Seize Pair In Wendel Case Perjury

Newark, N. J., Oct. 6 (AP).—Federal agents, who stamped "closed" on the bulky criminal file of Bruno Richard Hamptmann, went to work again with renewed vigor today to ferret out the facts of that bizarre Lindbergh kidnaping sequel—the Paul H. Wendel case.

New impetus, said Inspector Earl J. Connelley, of the Department of Justice, came from the arrest of two persons on charges of giving perjured testimony to the Federal grand jury investigating the Wendel case for "Lindbergh law" violations. The work of the Federal men, a high official hinted, might lead to further indictments when the grand jury reconvenes Friday.

Wife of Al Smith, Jr., Tells of Death Threats

Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 6 (AP).—Mrs. Bertha Gott Smith, wife of Alfred E. Smith, jr., son of former Gov. Al Smith, testified in a suit for legal separation today that her husband threatened to kill her on two occasions.

Supreme Court Justice James T. Cross, after conclusion of the day's session, reserved decision.

Widow Is Left $30,000 Wilmarth Ickes Estate

Chicago, Oct. 6 (AP).—The Estate of Wilmarth Ickes, stepson of Secretary Harold L. Ickes, amounted to $30,000 exclusive of insurance, it was shown today when a petition for letters of administration was filed in probate court. The will leaves the estate to his widow, Mary Elizabeth Ickes.

Ickes shot and killed himself in suburban Winnetka on August 31, the first anniversary of the death of his mother, Mrs. Anna Wilmarth Ickes, in an automobile accident near Velarde, N. Mex.

Slain Taxicab Driver Buried In Ft. Lincoln

Little Group of Relatives, Friends Mourns; Care of Children Undecided.

Silently a little group of relatives and friends filed yesterday into Chambers funeral home at 517 Eleventh street southeast to pay their last respects to Raymond Childress, slain Friday night by his landlord after an argument over $11 back rent.

In a little room apart sat the relatives. The widow, Mrs. Ruth Childress, heavily veiled and with head bowed, held the comforting hand of a brother, Joseph C. Johnson; the five children, some still too young to realize the bitter tragedy, were sheparded by their aging grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Childress.

Only the voice of the minister, the Rev. John E. Briggs, of the Fifth Baptist Church, could be heard, though every now and then his soft intonation was broken by Mrs. Childress' muffled sobs.

"I am the Ressurrection and the Life, saith the Lord. He that believeth in Me yet shall he live; whosoever liveth and believeth in Me can never die."

The voice of the minister ceased and all present filed past the bier. Handkerchiefs dabbed wet eyes, a child's high-pitched voice echoed out shrilly, and the ceremony was over.

Burial followed in Fort Lincoln Cemetery, just over the District line. Briggs again intoned a few prayers; the coffin was lowered; the widow, weeping, was led away by relatives.

So far no plans have been made for the five children of the slain cabdriver. A family conference today will map out a program for their future care.

New York to Rebuild Old Brooklyn Bridge

New York, Oct. 6 (AP).—Brooklyn Bridge, first and most famous span across the East River, is to be virtually rebuilt.

Commissioner F. J. H. Kracke, of the plant and structures department, said tonight that plans were being made to replace everything except the towers, the suspension cables and anchorages.

These are just as good today as they were when the bridge was first opened 53 years ago, he said, and engineers predict they will last anywhere from 500 to 1,000 years longer if they are properly cared for.

Present plans call for elimination of the elevated, and possibly of the surface car tracks to provide more room for automotive traffic.

Robinson Battles Stoll Kidnap Term

By the Associated Press.

Louisville, Ky., Oct. 6.—Counsel for Thomas H. Robinson, jr., moved to set aside his life term for the Stoll kidnaping after what the court called "scandalous matter" was stricken from their motion today.

Robinson's motion claimed:

He was incurably insane, his constitutional rights were denied at the trial when he pleaded guilty, he was mistreated by Federal agents and he was not guilty. Whether the court will entertain the motion will be argued Saturday, second anniversary of the kidnaping.

The Nashville, Tenn., prisoner pleaded guilty in May to kidnaping Mrs. Alice Speed Stoll, Louisville oil executive's wife, for whom $50,000 ransom was paid in October, 1934. Federal Judge Elwood Hamilton gave him life. He was confined in Atlanta and later transferred to Leavenworth. His wife and father were acquitted of the kidnaping last fall.

Poker.

The first pot in the poker game being played over at the Railroad Retirement Board between Edward J. Cox and Jessica Buck seems to have gone to Cox—but largely through a stroke of luck.

The stake in the game was whether there was to be a meeting tomorrow night of the expelled A. F. G. E. Lodge at the board. Miss Buck wanted the meeting to get the lodge on record as supporting the action of the joint committee on information of the five A. F. G. E. units whose temporary certificates were revoked, in sending a delegation to A. F. of L. President William F. Green. Cox is opposing such action and has refused to call a lodge meeting.

Followers of Miss Buck thought they had an ace in th hole in that Raymond Jewell, first vice president of the lodge, was to have returned to the city Monday, and since Cox has submittted his resignation as president, would have been able to call the meeting. On Monday, however, Jewell wrote from Berkeley, Calif., that through some oversight he had failed to receive his pay check and that he knew no one in Berkeley who would loan him the $50 needed for the train trip.

And so it looks like no meeting of the unit until next week at the earliest, when the poker players will sit down for another session.

A. F. G. E. council mmbers have laid plass for a huge organization drive in the District which probably will take the federation's organizers into agencies whose units were expelled at Detroit.

Patience.

Our candidate for the most patient man in Washington is Jean McPherson, of the McService Printing and Duplicating Co. The other day we called the Resettlement Administration and dialed National 7900 by mistake. Mr. McPherson answered and, without the slightest trace of displeasure in his voice, informed us that Resettlement's number was District 7900.

McPherson's politeness seemed all the more remarkable when we learned that every day between 15 to 20 persons dial his number thinking it belongs to the RA. McPherson has had the telephone number for 14 years and does not intend to change it for Rex Tugwell's sake—not that he has anything against the New Deal.

Invariably when he picks up the receiver he says "National 7900" in a rather firm, but resigned voice. Most persons immediately sense they have called the wrong number and hang up apologetically. If they seem confused McPherson patiently gives them the Resettlement number.

Marie Miller, secretary to John M. Carmody, former member of the National Labor Relations Board, is slated for transfer to the NLRB offices in San Francisco. NLRB unionists are awaiting the selection of a secretary to the new member of the board, Donald W. Smith, with an eye to whether the promotion agreement signed by the board and the union, will be observed.

Social Security Progress.

With the Social Security act front-page political news and the board itself laying plans for putting into effect the old-age provisions of the act, it seemed timely to ask the board officials what had been accomplished thus far in the way of public assistance—the one phase of the act that has been in force for more than a year.

Old-age assistance plans have been approved for 39 States, the District of Columbia and Hawaii; aid to the blind plans for 24 States and the District, and aid to dependent children plans for 25 States and the District, Geoffry May, acting director of the Public Assistance Division, revealed. Four plans for old-age assistance, three for the blind and three for dependent children are still pending.

Before the States submit their plans mimeographed schedules outlining the information required by the board are sent out, also brief explanations of the act and suggested drafts of sample laws and regulations that comply with the act's provisions. All the explanatory material is carefully labeled as advisory, which the States may reject or follow as they see fit. The board is anxious not to appear as if it is forcing any one plan down the throats of State authorities.

Plans must be sent into the board in quintuplicate which, we have been assured, is not an example of the Dionne influence. One copy goes to the general counsel's office for legal scrutiny, another to the Bureau of Accounts and Audits to determine whether the plan is financially adequate, a third to the office of the regional director for his information, a fourth remains in the Public Assistance Division which checks whether the administration of the plan will comply with the law, while the fifth copy goes to the board members for their files.

Board members approve or disapprove all plans, their action being based on the reports from the four divisions receiving copies of the plans. It requires at least a week for the reports to come in and the swiftest approval thus far has been ten days. Usually, however, particularly when the plans are incomplete, approval requires from three to four weeks.

Cost of Schools Is $11,502,954 In Fiscal Year

Sum Represents Increase of $192,000 From 1935, Board Declares.

Washington's public school system cost $11,502,954.41 during the last fiscal year, the Board of Education disclosed yesterday in its annual report to the District Commissioners.

Operating costs amounted to $10,416,883.46, an increase of $611,058.15 over the preceding year, while expenditures on capital improvements totalled $1,086,048.95. As the capital investments were $414,439.19 less than in the fiscal year 1935, the net increase in school costs was $192,619.96.

Construction of the Anacostia Junior High School and the Woodrow Wilson High School, for which $900,218.50 was spent, accounted for the greater part of the capital improvements.

Land purchases totaled $38,361.40; equipment for new buildings, $81,944.66, and apparatus for schools already in use, $65,524.39.

Maximum enrollment for the fiscal year 1936 was 100,908, as compared with 99,722 for the preceding year. It was classified as follows:

Elementary schools, 61,373; vocational schools, 2,034; junior high schools, 19,083; senior high schools, 16,890; junior-senior high school, 457, and teachers' colleges, 1,101.

A decrease in nonresident pupils was reported. Last year there were 1,947, or 1.96 per cent, whereas in 1935 there were 2,246, or 2.25 per cent.

The personnel of the school system gained 211. Teachers, increased from 2,906 to 2,965; community center employes, from 291 to 367, and custodial workers, from 674 to 710.

School Unit Head Guest at Meeting

Miss Louise Henderson, of Philadelphia, president of the National Association of School Secretaries, brought greetings from her organization to members of the Clerical Assistance Association of Washington, meeting yesterday in Wesley Hall, Seventeenth and K streets northwest.

Miss Henderson was introduced by Miss Grace Robinson, president of the local group.

At dinner preceding the meeting five members of the association who were recently married were honor guests. The newlyweds included: Mrs. Vera Beuhm, Mrs. Ann Smallwood, Mrs. Audrey Saxhaug, Mrs. Ruth Donovan and Mrs. Louise Raper.

Inquest Set in Death Of N. C. Man in Brawl

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald yesterday ordered an inquest into the death of Ernest McCrary, 40, of North Carolina, set for 11:30 a. m. tomorrow. The man died in Casualty Hospital after a street fight in front of 59 I street northwest Sunday night.

An autopsy performed at the District Morgue Monday showed McCrary died from an internal hemorrhage. Carroll Henkels, 19, of 59 I street northwest, who gave himself up at the First Precinct Station Monday morning is held by police in connection with the fight and will appear at the inquest.

Social Service, Art Mingled In Georgetown Child Show

Exhibition of 135 Sculptures, Graphics, Paintings at Library Work of 35 Pupils Whose Parents Can't Send Them to Private Schools.

An exhibition of sculptures, graphics and paintings on display this week at the Georgetown Library is the result of a co-operative social service and art project conceived two years ago by Val Clear—who was at that time director of the Art League—and carried out under the direction of Mrs. Netta Craig Turkenton.

Each Saturday morning for the past two years, 35 pupils, whose parents in most cases were not financially able to send them to private art schools, have spent two hours at Mount Tabor Methodist Protestant Church studying drawing and painting under Miss Elizabeth Barnes, or sculpture under Mrs. Betty Thompson Clear.

In directing the work of the school, Mrs. Turkenton, a graduate social service worker as well as an artist, has worked with the District of Columbia Industrial Home, the Jewish Council of Social Agencies and the Board of Public Welfare.

Charging a nominal fee to the children who could afford to pay it in order to defray expenses for materials used at the school, she has made an effort to see that every boy and girl with talent has been given an opportunity to develop it.

The Rev. Kenneth Lyons, pastor of Mount Tabor Methodist Protestant Church, has taken a special interest in the art classes, as have many members of his congregation. Mrs. Turkenton has tabulated case histories of each pupil entering the school, and in numerous instances has taken a personal interest in obtaining aid not only for needy, talented art pupils, but for other members of their families.

The fruits of their work at the school—135 sculptures, graphics and paintings of a variety of subjects, ranging from still life to portraits, now vie for attention with the books lining the walls of Georgetown Library. The exhibition will continue through Saturday.

Board to Consider School Vacancies

Vacancies in three important administrative positions, the question of changing the hour of opening school and several matters of regular business are expected to give the Board of Education a busy meeting this afternoon. It will be the board members' first meeting in three weeks.

Central High School has been without a principal since the school term began, and selection of a successor to Dr. Harvey A. Smith, former principal who is now an assistant superintendent, has been a major concern of Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent, and the board's personnel committee.

More than a dozen applicants are reported under consideration, but Dr. Ballou has not indicated his preference.

An assistant principal is to be named for Roosevelt High School, and the appointment is regarded as a significant one because of the expected retirement in December of Allan Davis, principal.

Republicans Seek Data on A.F.G.E. Rift

Party May Use Ouster to Link Roosevelt and Communists.

President's Failure to Act Seen Forming Basis for Voter Appeal.

Expulsion of five New Deal lodges during the Detroit convention of the American Federation of Government Employes on the grounds of communistic tendencies may be injected into the political campaign, it was learned last night.

The Republican National Committee, it was learned, is considering using the fact the temporary certificates of these New Deal Federal employe unions were revoked by the A. F. G. E. on "red" charges in an attempt to link President Roosevelt with communism.

Inquiries have been made in this city from Republican National Headquarters in Chicago for confirmation that the action of the Detroit convention was taken "on the grounds of communism."

To Cite "Reds" in Service.

Republican strategy, should the A. F. G. E. situation be thrown into the campaign, it was indicated, will be to point to the action of the A. F. G. E. convention as proof there are Communists in the Federal employ, and to denounce the President for not taking action to rid the services of these alleged "reds."

The New Deal agencies whose unions were expelled from the A. F. G. E. are the Social Security Board, the Securities Exchange Commission, the Farm Credit Administration, the Railroad Retirement Board and the Public Assistance Division of the District of Columbia government. All these unions have maintained their organizations despite the convention action.

At Detroit the convention expelled the more than 600 members of these unions on the basis of a report of the A. F. G. E. executive council, which was read by Cecil E. Custer, national treasurer of the federation, and leader in the anti-"red" campaign against the lodges.

The council's report blanketed the five unions with "red" charges and then went on to cite additional reasons for their expulsion.

The Social Security Board lodge was said to have accused officials of the Civil Service Commission with playing partisan politics and with being dominated with "an embarrassing leadership."

The Securities Exchange Commission was accused of having as one of its most prominent members "an individual known to have been a member of the Communist Party of America." The Railroad Retirement Board, the Farm Credit Administration and Public Assistance Units were charged with being "dominated by improper leadership," membership declines in the latter two units also being pointed out.

Cause Kept Secret.

No documentary evidence to support the council's charges was offered, the expulsion being made a vote of confidence in the executive council. In subsequent debate the only additional "evidence" produced was a statement by one District delegate that the Agricultural Adjustment Administrator had investigated Communist charges against 40 AAA employes and that on the basis of these investigations the 40 had been dismissed.

Asked by reporters when the AAA dismissals took place, the delegate replied that he was referring to the "purge" of a number of left-wing New Dealers, including Gardner Jackson, Jerome Frank, Lee Pressman, Frederic C. Howe and others. At the time of the dismissals the AAA, never to public knowledge, raised the charges of "communism." Individual members referred to, it was learned, are planning a protest against the delegate's statement.

Officers of the five "New Deal" lodges have persistently denied the charges and have formed a joint information committee to present their case to the American Federation of Labor, with which the A. F. G. E. is affiliated.

An interview with William F. Green, president of the A. F. of L., has been requested for Friday.

Miriam Alexander, 16, Chosen Queen of Hyattsville's Jubilee

Dramatic Critics Honor High School Student, Who Receives Diamond Ring From Mayor; Coronation, Parade Are on Saturday.

Miss Miriam Alexander, 16, a high school student, was chosen Miss Hyattsville last night for the golden jubilee celebration of Hyattsville. Dramatic critics of three Washington newspapers selected her.

The critics who bestowed the laurels of a queen were Nelson Bell, of The Washington Post; Betty Hines, the Herald, and Edward Melcher, of the Star.

Four maids of honor were chosen. These were Bertha Howard, 18; Elizabeth Padgett, 19; Miriam Murray, 17, and Irma Waldrop, 21. Candidates for the title of queen rode through the main streets of the city in limousines, thence to the Arcade Theater. Miss Alexander received a diamond ring from Maj. H. G. Willis.

Miss Alexander will be crowned Saturday afternoon at Magruder Park, and will receive a loving cup from Mayor Willis. Members of her court also will be honored.

A parade, featured by 60 floats, will attend her coronation. Prominent among the floats will be the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad's display, which will depict progress of the system from its infancy more than a century ago.

The festivities will be closed by a street dance, which will be held on Phillips street, Hyattsville.

'Jitney' Buses Are Proposed In Washington

Carriers, Operated by Cab Drivers, With 10-Cent Fares, Suggested.

Use of "jitney" buses as an answer to Washington's transportation problem was recommended by the Columbia Heights Citizens Association last night.

Complaining of the excessive number of taxicabs here, the association, in its resolution, suggested that "jitney" buses, similar to those in other cities, be operated on regular routes throughout the District. The buses, they said, could be operated by cab drivers, who could be allowed to charge 10 cents a passenger.

The measure, if adopted, it was explained, also would decrease the number of one-man cars necessary for the District's needs, and prevent considerable congestion now attributed to taxicabs downtown. Mrs. Marie F. Maddox presented the resolution.

A resolution offered by L. M. Maddox asking registration of professional engineers here was adopted. Maddox said that all but 12 States and the District compel engineers to be registered. A poll of engineers, Maddox argued, showed 82 per cent were in favor of a law governing registration.

The association gave a vote of thanks to its president, Mrs. Margaret H. Worrell, who was largely responsible for obtaining a Congressional appropriation that made the seventieth encampment of the G. A. R. possible.

Elimination of the few remaining grade crossings in the city was asked in a resolution submitted by F. M. Barnes.

Police Report Cost Of Services to U. S.

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, yesterday submitted a confidential report to Auditor Daniel J. Donovan on the estimated cost of services rendered the Federal Government by the Metropolitan Police Department.

The report is one of a dozen departmental estimates still to be submitted to J. L. Jacobs, director of the President's fiscal relations study.

Negotiations For Gas Deal Strike Snag

P. U. C. Insists Price for Properties Must Be Under $1,000,000.

By James D. Secrest.

Negotiations for the purchase by the Washington Gas Light Co. of the suburban plants at Alexandria and Hyattsville appeared yesterday to have reached an impasse as the Public Utilities Commission said it would not consider the proposal unless the price is "substantially below $1,000,000."

Three officials involved in the unconsummated deal between the Washington company and the Washington & Suburban companies, parent holding company controlling all three concerns, were closeted with the commission for more than an hour.

They gave no indication, however, of any willingness to reduce the original offer of $1,375,000 by so great a margin.

The utility representatives at the conference were George H. Clifford, president of the Stone & Webster Management Corporation, New York; George Wood, of the First Boston Corporation, and Robert C. Owers, treasurer of the Washington company.

Holding Company Agent.

Clifford is representing the holding company in its negotiations with the Washington company, 84 per cent of whose stock it owns but now proposes to place on the market.

Richmond B. Keech, vice chairman of the commission, told the utility spokesmen the District regulatory agency's primary interest is in protecting the financial condition of the Washington Gas Light Co. for the benefit of the local consumers.

He said the commission felt that any deal for the suburban plants that would cost the Washington company even $1,000,000 would not be in the public interest.

The utility representatives had indicated they might make a slight reduction in their initial figure, although they continued to insist that at $1,375,000 the Washington company would make a profit on the investment.

Declines to Fix Price.

The commission declined to fix a price on the suburban properties at the suggestion of the utility officials, but it is known that one of their experts believes that the value of the Alexandria plant is only about $200,000. The Washington company had agreed to pay about $525,000 for the property, although there has been no definite breakdown of the $1,375,000 between the Alexandria and Hyattsville plants.

Just what effect the attitude of the commission may have upon the proposal of the Washington & Suburban Companies to sell its 100,000 shares of Washington Gas Light Co. stock is conjectural.

Danning's Error Choked the Spirit of a Tired Team, Pegler Says

Play Reveals Season's Toll Of Fatigue

Tension of Series Held Responsible for Some of Worst Bobbles.

Giants Had a Chance 'Til the Murderous Ninth; Yanks Hit Too Well.

By Westbrook Pegler.

Polo Grounds, New York, Oct. 7. Our home-talent World Series wound up with a typical World Series taffy pull this afternoon when the Yankees made seven runs in the ninth to win the closing game, 13 to 5, and the series, four games to two. Although these games bring together the league champions under operatic conditions, as often as not they result in spectacular clowning due to the tension and the fatigue of men who have been training and playing from February or earlier March right up to October. The young ones, full of the varsity spirit and youthful zeal, often err from overtrying and the old ones feel the drag of weariness, a combination which makes for some ludicrous effects under solemn circumstances.

So a young player as expert as Joe DiMaggio, of the Yankees, lets a ball go past him for an error which ordinarily he would just pick up and old guys in their thirties shove their tired and faltering meat through antics much too strenuous. Will Terry, the Giants' manager, a great athlete in his time, Travis Jackson and Fred Fitzsimmons, the Giants' starting pitcher, seemed badly winded as the game dissolved into good-natured resignation on their side and Bill Dickey, the Yankees' catcher, looked as though his mind was on old canvas clothes and an Indian Summer vacation, way off somewhere. Few men in baseball have taken the physical beating that somehow befalls Dickey in his work of standing off hurtling bodies and gleaming spikes at the plate and though he manned his job as usual in the closing scene he was a tired athlete as you could see by his action.

Error Chokes Spirit.

The Giants still had a ghost of a chance to win going into the ninth, for they were trailing only 6 to 5, but the second-string was in the game at the time due to some emergency shuffling in the seventh when it looked as though they had a chance to do themselves some good. The second-string was not perceptibly worse than the varsisty except in one instance, where Harry Danning, the relief catcher, let a throw get away from him in a rundown. Thus DiMaggio scored when he shoud have been out and there is no telling but that this discouraging stroke choked the Giants' spirit. It didn't need much choking by then, anyway. Thirteen hitters went to bat in this travesty on the great national game and Mr. Ford Frick, the president of the National League, who is a chamber of commerce man with ideals and partisan emotions, writhed himself almost out of his clothes at the humiliation of it all.

Dick Coffman was pitching for Terry's side and his presence alone as an admission of despair, for Coffman isn't much and he wouldn't have been there if there had been a better man available.

It seemed that the bases would be loaded with nobody out until opening day next April, but the Yankees probably wanted to get out of their working clothes, collect their money and call it a season.

Resuls as Expected.

On results, the series developed according to most of the impartial prophecies of the fortune tellers who follow the teams around and around and call that toil. The Yankees, winning four games to two, just about corroborated the theories which were advanced before the show, but the less said about the details, the better. Carl Hubbell was to have been the Giants' only strength and he did win one game, but Hal Schumacher unexpectedly took the other. But, generally speaking, the Yanks won by smashing the ball all over the joint according to the probabilities and there were two games out of five in which the major league standard of dexterous grace and skill was held up to ridicule and thousands cheered.

Now that is over and the boys will vanish from sight and sound, giving way to football, then hockey and the indoor fights and college sports. It has been a pleasant break in the grim politicial ruction of the Presidential year, serving to distract the attention of some from hating and the telling of wilful lies and the calling of dirty names. It is too bad it couldn't last another month. People don't know much about baseball, when you come right down to that, but they know much less about politics and economics and baseball doesn't rile them up with explosive fallacies.

Yankees Give Selves Big Hand On World Series Victory

A few of the new World's Champions giving themselves three cheers just after whipping the Giants in the deciding game of the series. Manager Joe McCarthy and Owner Jacob Ruppert (center), seem to be just a little happier than the rest. The others, it appears, apparently are under the impression that Ruppert has just said, "All right boys, the beers are on me."

Dressing Rooms Like Madhouse and Morgue

Terry Calls Yanks 'The Greatest Team I Ever Played Against.'

Room Is Packed With All Manner of Hangers On, Reporters.

By the United Press.

New York City, Oct. 6.—Bill Terry, his baseball pants draped on his knees and a sweatshirt hanging around his neck, stood alone in his combination office and dressing room. In back of him was a mirror. Over it was a sign which read: "Think."

Outside in the clubhouse it was like a morgue. Carl Hubbell read letters and smoked a cigarette. Old Adolfo Luque, Giant coach, sat on a stool and looked like he was going to break into tears. Nobody spoke.

A few reporters—many of them men who had been with the Giants since the days of McGraw—stood about, afraid to speak. Finally one of them walked past the threshold of the open door to Terry's room. The others followed.

A Few Questions.

A few carefully worded questions were fired at Bill. He smiled wryly and said:

"Why don't you fellows go next door. That's where the story is. Nobody cares what I say. Those Yankees deserve all the play in your papers. We were the losers, that's all."

He looked up at a pennant on the wall—a white and purple affair "Champions of the National League, 1921."

What about that seventh inning where he took apart his infield? Was that smart baseball, Terry was asked.

"I don't know," he said sorrowfully. "We gambled and we lost—what more could we do? We were on the spot and we broke our necks trying to get off it.

"They are the toughest bunch in the world to pitch to and I think we did good staving them off the way we did. They knew they were in a fight—and we sure were, too."

Terry's Last Game.

Terry said today's probably was his last game. His injured knee pained him and he said that next year he was certain to do his master-minding from the bench, going into the game only as a relief man or pinch hitter.

Ford Frick, the youthful National League president, came in and offered his sympathies.

"It was a tough series, Bill, but you boys played nobly against that bunch of horsehide murderers."

None of the players had anything to say. Most of them started packing for their trips home. Freddie Fitzsimmons, who departed the game in the fourth inning, couldn't be found. Others in various stages of undress—just sat around and stared, smoked and muttered curses under their breaths.

When he got dressed Terry started over to the Yankee dressing room, but couldn't get in because of the crowd. He said he would go downtown tonight and congratulate the "greatest team I ever played against." He will return to Memphis in a day or two and return to New York in December for the major league meetings.

75,000 to See Ohio State Play Pitt on Saturday

Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 6 (AP).—Henry Taylor, director of ticket sales, announced today that a crowd of 75,000 or more would witness the contest between Ohio State and the Pittsburgh Panthers Saturday.

Ohio's team, regarded by some observers as under-dog for the first time in three years, practiced in the rain today. After they became accustomed to handling a slippery ball, Coach Francis A. Schmidt moved his proteges under the protection of the Stadium walls. The rain prevented scrimmage.

Powell Leading Series Hitter, With .455

Homer, 2 Singles Today Puts Him 55 Points Up on Rolfe, Runnerup.

By a Staff Correspondent.

New York, Oct. 6.—Three hits rocketed from the bat of Jake Powell today and the former Takoma Park sandlotter established himself as the leading batter of the 1936 World Series.

Underestimated in preseason appraisals of the Yankees' batting attack, the astounding young outfielder from Washington who was traded to the Yank by the Nats in midseason, set the series batting pace from start to finish.

Ten hits rattled off his bat in his 22 official trips to the plate during the series to amass for Powell the impressive average of .455. Fifty-five points behind was his closest rival for series batting honors—Red Rolfe, Yankee third baseman, who had a .400 average with 10 hits in 25 appearances.

At the outset of the series, Powell forged into the batting lead, with three hits, one a double, against the screwball pitching of Carl Hubbell, in five times at bat.

The second game at the Polo Grounds saw Powell take part in the 18-4 slaughter with two singles in three official times at bat. He was held hitless only in that four-hit third game pitched by Fitzsimmons, when he walked once in three appearances.

The fourth game saw Powell resume his hitting with an eight-inning single off Harry Gabler in his fourth time at bat, and yesterday against Hal Schumacher he collected another single in four official appearances.

Today, with Rolfe crowding him for hitting honors, Powell entered the home-run class in his first time at bat against Fitzsimmons. He followed with a single off Castleman in the fourth, struck out twice, and then singled off Coffman in the eighth.

Yankees Rout Giants, 13 to 5, to Win Series

who on that occasion had reduced their batting attack to four hits.

Wiping out a 2-0 lead Gomez had surrendered to the Giants in the first inning, the Yankees clubbed the pitching of the arm-weary Fitzsimmons for nine hits in the second, third and fourth innings, took over the lead by 5-2, and forced the fat fellow from the ball game.

Never did the Yankees relinquish the lead that they acquired in the third inning. Mel Ott's home run in the fifth inning reduced their margin to 5-3 and a run the Giants pushed across in the seventh cut it to 5-4. But the Giants were never able to pull to even terms.

It was in that seventh inning that the Giants muffed their big opportunity. Trailing by two runs, they retrieved one when Bartell slammed a double over third base and scored on Terry's single that followed. But Terry, who raced to second base when his hit skidded through DiMaggio's legs advanced to third base by Lieber's sacrifice, languished on base with that tying run.

Powell Steps Up.

Gomez, however, was forced from the game. In a hole against Ott, he walked him ultimately to put the potential winning run on first. Then it was that young Johnny Murphy came in to pitch the Yanks out of trouble.

With the Giants needing only a long fly to tie the score, not even a long fly was forthcoming. Murphy disposed of three left-handed pinch hitters rushed into the breach by Manager Terry.

Sam Leslie, twice the author of hits in two pinch-hitting roles. Murphy retired on a meek pop foul to Rolfe. Jim Ripple he walked to fill the bases and against Mark Koenig he broke off a delectable curve that cut the heart of the plate for a third strike.

The irrepressible Jake Powell, the lucky guy who was traded to the Yankees by Washington in midseason and is emerging from this series as the leading hitter of both teams, put the Yankees emphatically back into the ball game with a home run after the Giants had taken their 2-to-0 lead in the first inning.

Selkirk Triples.

With two out in the second, George Selkirk, another underestimated hero of the Yanks in this series, boomed a tremendous triple to deep right centerfield. Fitzsimmons then was confronted with Powell.

Three pitches Powell ignored, and the count was three balls, no strikes. Fitzsimmons then slapped a curve over the plate. Then he attempted to slip another past Jake. It never reached the plate. Intercepting the pitch with his bat, Powell whacked a terrific home run into the leftfield upper deck and the score was tied, 2-2.

Into a 3-2 lead forged the Yanks in the third when Rolfe and DiMaggio bashed singles to left and Rolfe scored on Gehrig's liner to Ott. The lower end of the batting took up the firing in the fourth. Powell beat out a hit to Bartell, Lazzeri singled to left and Gomez, himself, authored the third straight hit off Fitzsimmons, a single to left. With two out, Rolfe's single to right center scored the second run of the inning.

Moore Gets Homer.

With mixed emotion of sympathy for Fitzsimmons and anger at the turn of events, Manager Bill Terry walked to the mound, slapped the portly pitcher on the back and motioned him out of the ball game, calling in Clyde Castleman.

Castleman checked the Yankee's fourth inning uprising, then hurled three scoreless innings and second guessers in the stands bemoaned the fact that Terry had chosen Fitzsimmons as his starting pitcher.

The Giants had cut the Yanks' lead to 5-4, but Castleman was not to escape the dynamite in the Yankees' bats. He walked Dickey and Selkirk reached him for a single to right. Lazzeri drove a single to left that scoerd Dickey and the Yanks had a 6-4 margin.

Joe Moore stirred anew the hopes of Giant adherents when he boomed his home run into the right field with one out in the eighth, but he was the last Giant to reach base in this World Series.

Gallaudet Ready For Bridgewater

Coming out of a lengthy and bruising scrimmage with nothing more serious than a few black and blue spots, Gallaudet's gridmen yesterday were pronounced fit and ready for Saturday's inaugural with Bridgewater, at Bridgewater, Va. Coaches Wally Krug and Orrell Mitchell intend to put their men through another scrimmage today and devote tomorrow and Friday to work on plays.

Gallaudet's complete schedule after Saturday is: October 17, permanently open; 24, William and Mary at home; 31, Wilson Teachers at home; November 7, C. C. N. Y. at New York; 14, Mount St. Mary's at Emmitsburg.

Houghton Shoots 66.

Awaiting an appointment as professional at a golf club in the South, Al Houghton, former Kenwood professional, returned to familiar scenes yesterday and cracked out a 66 in an informal round at Washington Golf and Country Club.

Clipping 4 strokes off par for the eighteen, Houghton shot the first nine in 30 to tie the unofficial record for that side—a record he set two years ago when he scored an all-time 30, 31—61.

Cousins Will Call Signals for Navy And Yale Elevens

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 6.—When Yale and the Navy clash in the Baltimore Stadium on October 17 Clinton Frank will be calling signals for the Bulldogs and his first cousin and teammate on the eleven of Evansville (Ill.) High School, Frank Case, will be doing the same thing for the Goats. Both are natives of that city and are in the third year of their respective colleges.

The two opposed each other when Yale and the Navy met at New Haven last year and should have another meeting next season. Last year the resemblance between the two was noted. Case is a year older than Frank and graduated from high school a year before him. They are much of the same build and last year weighed almost the same. This year Frank is heavier by ten pounds than his Navy cousin.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

No Game Today: Wet Giants.

Polo Grounds, Oct. 6.—The Yanks returned to the sock standard, devalued the National League and repudiated the good neighbor policy.

Not only that but they took a firm stand for centralization of power and athletic ability, all along the line.

The only question is whether it was a World Series or an atrocity.

After fooling around all afternoon like a bunch of League of Nations delegates trying to decide what to do with Selassie, those Ruppert ruffians blasted the Giants out of the park, getting more runs in one inning than they had tallied all day.

For what they did to the enemy in that one chukker they could have been prosecuted for arson, mayhem, mutiny, first-degree murder and sabotage.

It was as if, being good showmen, they saved everything up to make a Roman holiday and bring down the curtain on a scene that would make the retreat from Moscow seem like a chapter from "Little Goody Twoshoes."

The entire Yankee team batted from top to bottom before anybody was out. Every time the Giant pitcher threw a ball he knew it was a case of "gone with the wind-up."

The bases have never been so full as often in any one inning in World Series history. They could have penalized the Yankees at any moment of that inning for unnecessary roughness, tackling the pitcher high, and piling on the catcher.

If Mr. Gumbert, one of the many pitchers called into action by the Giants, doesn't sue Terry, Stoneham and the National League, he is no business man.

Unless, of course, he was covered with insurance, including accident, collision, fire, cyclone and wreckage at sea, and sudden ambush.

The Giants had nobody else but Hubbell. And they are saving him for next season.

The Giants started off today's game with what is known as "wim and wigor." They looked like maneating sharks the way they went after those Yanks in the first inning. But at the grand finale they resembled nothing so much as a fish the taxidermist forgot to stuff.

As a spectacle it beat anything in the series and approached the burning of San Sebastian. But as a ball game it was strictly a dock riot.

Up to the ninth it was still anybody's game but after that it was just the Yanks versus Joe Doakes.

Series 'Take' Nets Teams $460,000

30 Yanks to Get $6,440 Apiece; Giants to Get $4,656 Each.

Record Gate Also Gives Griffmen a Total of $11,500 to Split Up.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 6.—Seven new attendance and financial records were written into the World Series books tonight as players of the two New York Clubs prepared to divide their share of the largest gross receipts in the history of the series.

With $1,204,399 taken in at the gate and $100,000 gained from radio broadcasting rights, the aggregate players' pool amounted to $460,002.66. The champion Yankees and the Giants divide 70 per cent of this or $322,001.86 on a 60-40 basis, with the Yanks getting $193,201.11 and the Giants $128,800.75.

The Yankees voted to divide their $193,201.11 into approximately 30 shares, with each player getting $6,440.03. The Giants divided theirs into 27 full shares plus several grants to club employes and came out with $4,656.40 each. The largest loser's share previous to this was $4,244.60, received by the Chicago Cubs in 1932.

Nats Get $11,500.

The remaining 30 per cent of the players' pool or $138,000.80, is divided among players of the second, third and fourth-place clubs in both leagues. The second-place clubs get 50 per cent, the third-place clubs 33 1-3 per cent and the fourth-place clubs 16 1-3 per cent.

Thus, the Detroit Tigers will get $34,500.20, the St. Louis Cardinals and the Chicago Cubs, who tied for second in the National League, get $28,750.16 each. The third-place money for the White Sox amounts to $23,000.14, and the fourth-place teams, the Pittsburgh Pirates and the Washington Nationals draw $11,500.06.

Color, Punch Ordered for Cubs of '37

Wrigley Demands Club With More Fight and Noise.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Oct. 6.—The Cubs of 1937 must have more color and punch, which Phil K. Wrigley says were all too lacking last season. He demands a noisy, battling team.

After watching his club show only a resemblance during the late campaign to the crew that won the 1935 National League title, Owner Wrigley has reached the conclusion that the Cubs need more ball players who get their uniforms dirty in performance of duty. There will be plenty of money for bigger laundry bills—and probably not so much for salaries.

To satisfy Wrigley, who regards baseball as a serious busines proposition rather than a hobby, the Cubs of 1937 must have not only more punch, but much more color. Instead of the complacent type of athlete, of which he hints, without mentioning any names, that there were more than a few, he wants a noisy, battling team.

Charlie Grimm, who led the club to the 1935 championship, will manage the Cubs again next year, Wrigley says. And Wrigley has given Grimm full authority to use any members of the squad in deals for able, colorful players.

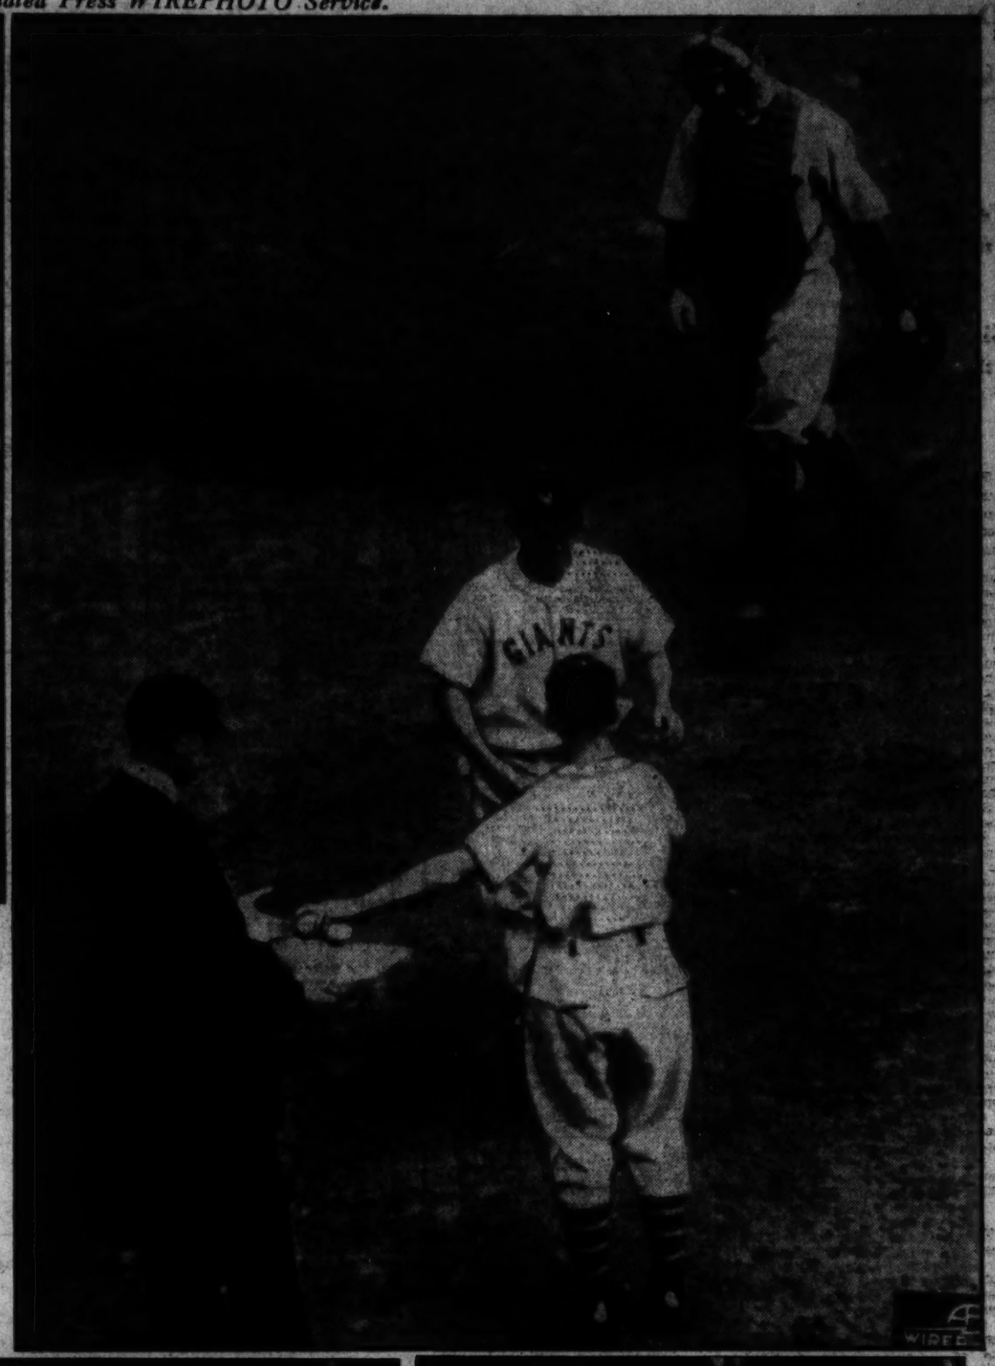
As Yanks Smash Giants' Last Defense to Win World Series

The Post is the only morning paper in Washington with Associated Press WIREPHOTO Service.



Associated Press WIREPHOTOS.

DI MAGGIO TRAPPED, MAKES HOME SAFELY. The Yanks' centerfielder is shown scoring in the ninth when Catcher Danning dropped Mayo's throw. Joe made a dive for home plate after being trapped off third when Dickey grounded to Terry. At right, Mel Ott is shown coming home on his second homer of the series, when he clouted the first pitch offered by Lefty Gomez in the fifth inning, sending the ball to the upper leftfield stands.

JOE DI MAGGIO ALMOST CAUGHT OFF FIRST. The Yankee leftfielder, who reached first in the third inning on a single to leftfield, came near getting nipped off the bag when Catcher Mancuso whipped the ball down to Terry.

FOR THE SOUVENIR HUNTERS. Along the Yankee bench the ball players were busy autographing balls even before the first batter was called to the box. Red Rolf is shown above signing his name to some of the balls. At right, Jake Rupert beaming happily as he was pictured with Manager McCarthy before the game started. Judging from the glowing countenance of the Yanks' owner, he sensed victory before the battle was under way.

MOORE SCORES FIRST RUN FOR GIANTS. More intent on where Ott's two-bagger was going than on the fact he was scoring the first run of the sixth World Series game, Jo-Jo Moore trots across the plate in the first inning as Catcher Dickey and Umpire Geisel stand by.

POWELL'S HOMER TIES SCORE. Jake Powell shown crossing home plate after he drove one into the upper leftfield stands, scoring George Selkirk, who had just crossed the plate before him.

Rough Time Beats Gay Balko in Feature Race at Laurel Track

Winner Pays Mutuel of $13.30

Betty's Buddy Returns $19.40 in First Race; Lord Johnson Wins.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Laurel, Md., Oct. 6.—J. Y. Christmas' Rough Time showed excellent speed today in winning the Magothy Purse, feature event of today's program. The juvenile Grand Time gelding scampered to the wire two and a half lengths in front of Gay Balko, half of the favored Vanderbilt entry, with Moon Harvest in third place three lengths away.

The victory was in the nature of a surprise for the majority of the crowd of 8,000 which played the Vanderbilt pair, Gay Balko and Irrepressible, as if the race had already been run. Rough Time was a paddock tip and made good at a $13.30 mutuel.

Rough Time ran the five and a half furlongs in 1:06 3/5 over a fast track.

The contest was between Rough Time and Gay Balko from the start. Gay Balko was first to show in front but Rough Time came up to challenge before the field had reached the far turn. Jockey Lynch asked Rough Time for additional speed entering the stretch and the young gelding responded to take command. Jockey L. Fallon put Gay Balko to a stout drive but to no avail. Rough Time was drawing farther away as the finish line approached.

E. K. Bryson's Kievson took the fifth race by a margin of three parts of a length from Mrs. E. Denemark's Knight's Fancy. Third money in the field of ten was garnered by W. Elliot's Xandra. Kievson, always a forward factor, was put to a drive at the far turn and gradually caught the pacesetting Knight's Fancy. The winner, clocked in 1:46 1-5, paid a $9.90 mutuel. Xandra met interference on the backstretch and closed full of run.

The consistent Gallant Miss owned by Mrs. Ethel D. Jacobs, added another purse to her collection in the sixth race while in the role of a $3.80 favorite. The Gallant Fox filly had daylight to spare over Chrysmute with Pumice Stone, which set most of the pace, in third place. Gallant Miss came through on the rail at the far turn to gain command and gave her backers no anxious moments thereafter. She ran the mile and 70 yards in 1:44 2-5.

Betty's Buddy Pays $19.

Mrs. J. Bosley, jr., owner of the ill-fated Chase Me, saw her colors borne to victory in the first race by Betty's Buddy, 2-year-old son of Bud Lerner. Ridden by the popular apprenticed, H. Le Blanc, Betty's Buddy romped to the finish line two lengths ahead of Mrs. J. V. Stewart's Romney Royal, with Uvalde, the property of Mrs. E. Denemark, third in the field of ten. Betty's Buddy slightly crowded both Romney Royal and Mandingham in getting to the front, and Jockey Rose, who rode the former, made a futile claim of foul. The winner paid a $19.40 mutuel while running the 6 furlongs in 1:07 4-5.

Mrs. F. Ambrose Clark's Lord Johnson proved a worthy favorite in the day's steeplechase event. The 8-year-old Geldedo, son of Sir John Johnson, emerged from the 2-mile contest with a five-length advantage over A. B. Hagner's Flying Feathers, with Mrs. T. W. Forbes' Little Woman third and six lengths away from place money. Lord Johnson was a lukewarm choice at a $7.10 mutuel and was clocked in 3:53 2-5, ordinary time for the course.

Peppery Worth $9.90.

Leana G., a Bostonian filly, defeated a field of ten other cheap sprinters in the third race over the six furlong course. Ridden capably by Jockey R. Root, Leana G. drove to a half length decision over A. G. Vanderbilt's Saracen, which in turn, led Iron Ore by 2½ lengths. Saracen was used up running with Canard, a long shot that set most of the pace, and had little left for the late stages. Leana G. paid a $6.30 mutuel and completed a $159.70 daily double. She ran the three quarters in 1:13 2-5.

Mrs. J. Bosley, jr., accounted for her second purse of the afternoon when Peppery took the seventh race under the good handling of Jockey Jackie Westrope. The Claptrap filly shook off Goantell to take the lead entering the final straightaway and easily held Sparky safe to win by a length and a half. Goantell lasted to be third. The winner paid $9.90 and was clocked for the mile and 70 yards in 1:45 1-5.

Bristol to Open $90,000 Stadium

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Bristol, Va., Oct. 6.—Bristol will be football mad this week as fans throng the city Saturday night to see King College and Emory and Henry wage their traditional battle in the brilliant setting of Bristol's new $90,000 athletic stadium.

The game will be the climax of a great King College "home-coming" celebration, in which hundreds of alumni of this section and from distant States will mingle in class reunions and a general alumni banquet. J. E. O'Dell, jr., prominent Bristol attorney and president of the King College Alumni Association, is directing plans for this feature of the "home-coming" observance.

At the stadium work is being feverishly pushed to complete the remaining details necessary to the accommodation of the largest throng that has ever seen a football game in this section.

BETTY'S BUDDY circled ROMNEY ROYAL and MANDINGHAM, slightly crowding them at the far turn to take command, opened a gap entering the stretch and was kept to a drive to the end. ROMNEY ROYAL continued gamely after losing the lead and was gaining on the winner slowly at the finish. UVALDE worked his way between horses leaving the backstretch, but could not better position in late stages. BOLD PIRATE closed with good energy. TINDER BOX made a very wide turn into the final straightaway and failed to threaten. DUNNAMANY was squeezed back sharply soon after the break and closed full of run.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—LORD JOHNSON, $7.10, $5.90, $4.30; FLYING FEATHERS, $8.10, $6.40; LITTLE WOMAN, $7.90.

LORD JOHNSON, steadied over the jumps and under restraint, while forwardly placed, disposed of SKIMALONG when put to a drive and was eased up when that one fell. FLYING FEATHERS, in close attendance of the pace from the beginning, made a bad landing at the seventh, but recovered to easily take the place. LITTLE WOMAN gained slowly during the second mile and fenced well throughout. CLONARD, within striking distance of the leaders, failed to rally after landing poorly at the seventh fence. QUICK VERDICT, under stout restraint for ten fences, gained slowly when turned loose. SKIMALONG set a fast pace, made a shaky landing at the tenth fence, recovered, but lost rider at the fourteenth fence. CAPSTAN ran out of the course going to the first jump.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 2:34. Off at 2:40½. Winner, L. L. LEANA G., a forward factor from the beginning, was under slight restraint to the stretch, rallied when put to drive midway of the stretch and wore down SARACEN i nthe last 20 yards. SARACEN, hard used matching strides with CANARD, faltered slightly in the closing stages. IRON ORE came with a rush in the stretch. FERVID raced in tight quarters mast of the way. TITIAN KIDDIE, off in a tangle, saved ground entering the stretch, but faltered suddenly approaching the finish. CANARD had excellent early speed, but tired from hustling tactics. The others were always outrun.

DAILY DOUBLE PAID $159.70.

FOURTH RACE—Five and one-half furlongs. Purse, $1,000; allowances. The Magothy. For 2-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:05½. Off at 3:09. Winner, J. ROUGH TIME was hustled up to press the pace of GAY BALKO going to the first turn, was put to stout pressure midway of the stretch and gradually drew out. GAY BALKO had good early speed, was hard ridden throughout, but could not resist the winner. MOON HARVEST held his forward position from the start, but could not menace. MAKALAW dropped back at the break, gained sharply on the swing for the stretch, but hung thereafter. STEEPLETOP closed gamely.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:37. Off at 3:39½. Winner, E. K. KIEVSON, under steadying restraint while within striking distance of the leaders, moved up nearing the far turn, raced on the outside of KNIGHTS FANCY to the stretch and gradually drew out under energetic handling. KNIGHTS FANCY saved ground while setting the pace, but could not resist the winner despite hard riding. XANDRA came with good courage in the stretch run after meeting with interference on the backstretch and was going fastest at the end. SHOT AND SHELL had no excuses.

SIXTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:08. Off at 4:08. Winner, Mrs. E. L. GALLANT MISS, shut off repeatedly while running along the rail, was lucky to find racing room on the inside at the far turn, came through to take command and held CHRYSMUTE safe in the final drive. The latter was in trouble soon after the first turn, gained gradually thereafter, but could not threaten the winner. PUMICE STONE ran MISS GINBAR into submission while setting the pace, but faltered. MISS FERN dropped back after running close up for five furlongs. The others were outrun.

SEVENTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward, fillies and mares. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:36. Off at 4:40½. Two-dollar mutuels paid—PEPPERY, $9.90, $4.20, $3.80; SPARKY, $4.80, $4.00; GOANTELL, $5.60.

PEPPERY, close to the pace in the early running, rallied when put to drive to dispose of GOANTELL in the early stretch, but was kept to a strong hand ride to the end. SPARKY, badly outrun to the far turn, was sent around horses for racing room and came with a rush in the final stages. GOANTELL had speed to take command at once, saved ground, but faltered in the final quarter. BERRY PATCH went evenly to the stretch turn, saved ground and closed willingly. TIANA raced wide most of the way and failed to threaten. BELLEEK was pinched back while in tight quarters leaving the backstretch.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:06. Off at 5:07. Winner, Miss A. Booker's b. g. (4), by Dress Parade—Garrie Moore. Trained by J. Booker. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:24 1-5, 0:48 1-5, 1:14 1-5, 1:39 3-5, 1:52 3-5.

MANUAL ran NO MISTAKE into defeat after a half, withstood a challenge from FOGARTY and held MORE PEP safe in the final stages. MORE PEP saved ground entering the stretch to gain sharply, but hung at the end. FOGARTY came from far back to gain a forward position, but faltered at the end. MAD FRUMP failed to rally when put to a drive in the last quarter. NO MISTAKE tired after running with MANUAL.

'Spy' Rumors Excite Catholic U. Campus, Bring Private Drills

2 Uninvited Guests Asked To Leave

Team Looks Good in Work on LaSalle's Style of Play.

Catholic University's campus was thrown into a state of alarm bordering on hysteria yesterday when a report was circulated that spies had invaded the Cardinals' domain in an attempt to gain secret and important information concerning the football team

While Brookland buzzed with stories of espionage and "boring from within," the spies, it appears, were a few uninvited guests—total strangers to the school and athletic officials, who stationed themselves at a point of vantage on the practice field before the team appeared for practice. 'Spotted" by an assistant manager they left immediately by request.

Coach "Dutch" Bergman was prone to regard the incident lightly last night, pointing out that if they were spies they picked a poor day for their task, inasmuch as Catholic spent all of yesterday afternoon on the defense, drilling against La Salle plays. Others, however, took the matter more seriously, pointing out that with Mississippi, C. U.'s opponent next week, in this vicinity, friends of the "Rebels," might be trying to aid them with a few pointers concerning the Cardinals.

Practice Private.

Practice the rest of this week will be private with admission to the field by permit only.

The team looked good in stopping LaSalle's passing attack, as demonstrated by the freshmen, or it may have been that the freshmen looked bad. Josh Williams, a triple-threat halfback, does most of the Explorers' passing and this role was portrayed by "Injun Joe" Guyon, a triple-threater in the frosh backfield.

Indictaions point to a banner attendance at Saturday's game, which is being sponsored by the Knights of Columbus. A heavy advance sale has been reported with demands for tickets coming in daily.

Ed Blakeney Bowls Season High Set of 420

Ed Blakeney featured the second week of actviity in the Elks League last night at the Recreation alleys when he pounded the maples for a season high of 420 to put the Brotherly Love team into a tie for the league lead with the Antlers. The mark topped the 368 set formerly held by Joe Riani, president of the league.

The Jesters, in a six-way tie for third place, hold high-team game with 585, and the Antlers have top set of 1,628. The Antlers and Brotherly Love gained the No. 1 position with odd-game decisions over Stuard and Charity, respectively.

Seven Players At G. U. Prep Injured

Clash With Friends Team Next Week; Hargaden Has 4 Lettermen.

Under the guidance of Ed Hargaden, former Georgetown athlete, Georgetown Prep's football future is rapidly assuming encouraging proportions. In spite of injuries which have incapacitated seven of his mainstays, the prospects of the Little Hoyas are anything but dark.

Most of the injured men Hargaden expects to have in tip-top shape by the time the first game rolls around with Friends School a week from Friday. Four lettermen gave the coach a fair basis for his 1936 combination which appears strong enough to keep the gridiron prestige the school earned under Coach Joe Gardner.

Ed Cummings, a good tackle last year, has been shifted to the backfield where Bob O'Shaugnessy, another '35 letterman is again back in uniform. Joe Murray, an end, and Dick Canning, All-Prep guard, are the other regulars on deck. Tommy Graham, son of the owner of the Graham-Paige Co.; Bill McGowan, jr., son of the American League umpire; Jackie Dettweiler, and Bill Byrd, are four more members of the squad of '35 on hand.

In addition to this contingent, Coach Hargaden has two full teams of whom Bill Douglas, a veteran guard from Stevens Prep, New Jersey; John Coakley, a center from Warrensville Prep, New Jersey, and Bob Boylan, a fullback from Chicago, are particularly outstanding.

Among the injured men are Carroll Sheehan, an end, who has an infected right ankle but the coach expects him to be able to play most of the schedule. Byrd, on the other hand, an experienced tackle, is possibly out for the season with water on the knee. Jack Byare, a tackle, broke his thumb in a recent scrimmage and will probably be unable to play in the first two games.

Colonials Scrimmage Terps in Secret Drill

In a meeting as secretive as a private conclave of the Supreme Court, George Washington scrimmaged Maryland yesterday at College Park, using all of the black magic it will employ against Mississippi Friday night at Griffith Stadium. If it baffles the Rebels as completely as it did the Terps it's going to be a tough night for the Southerners.

To insure privacy the teams used the field farthest removed from the stadium—almost in the woods. The scheme was successful, and when the trick stuff worked it was so successful that even Maryland wasn't around. The drill lasted until darkness settled over the field and might have continued until a couple of boys bumped noggins in the inky blackness. That was enough for Mr. Pixlee, the G. W.'s coach, for he was one of the boys.

Maryland spent all of its time on the offensive within the 10-yard zone drilling on proper plays to be used in this territory. Coach Frank Dobson had his boys throwing laterals and straight forwards most of the time, although running plays were not entirely neglected. "Jumbo Jim" Meade did not report in time for scrimmage, but will see plenty of action today in another inter-squad workout.

Jay Turner, burly G. W. fullback, joined Capt. Frank Kavalier, Leon Morris and Bruce Mahan on the casualty list, twisting his ankle, but is expected to be ready for Friday's fray.

Pixlee has decided on a couple of shifts to bolster the center of his line, moving Scheiring from tackle to guard, where he replaces Weinberg, and sending Al Haringer from guard to the backfield, where his speed will be more beneficial. The Colonials will have to give away a tremendous amount of weight to the Rebels, who average around 200 pounds in the line.

A throwback to the free-scoring games of '28 and '30 is expected in the Maryland-Carolina game at Chapel Hill this week-end, since both clubs boast almost unlimited backfield material. In 1928 the Terps lost a 25-19 decision and in '30 were defeated by a 28-21 score.

Although Bill Guckeyson is back in uniform and apparently suffering no after effects from his leg injury, he will not be used this week. Maryland will be thankful to have its triple-threat star back for the Virginia and succeeding games if he is able to play at all.

Bullis Works For Friday's First Fray

Boasting a big squad culled from 11 States and the District of Columbia, Bullis Prep is busily fortifying itself for its opening game of the season Friday, when it meets Roosevelt High in Roosevelt Stadium.

Coached by Pat Mahoney, former Dartmouth star, and Norwood (South) Sothern, Maryland's former All-Conference backfield star, the prepsters loom as a decided threat to take the prep school title of the Capital area this year. Devitt Prep, Gonzaga, St. John's, St. Alban's, Landon and Friends will also be gunning for the title, with Devitt apparently Bullis' most dangerous rival.

Devitt, local champions, took an 18-0 decision last year, but both Coach Mahoney and Coach Sothern are expecting a stronger Bullis team this season although only one 1935 regular, Ed Hahnfeldt, all-prep fullback, is back in uniform. The 198-pound resident of Palatine, Ill., will again hold down the fullback post.

Comprising a line averaging 178 pounds will be Donald Vogts, of Philadelphia, and Ford Clark, of Monongahela, Pa., at the ends; Bob Reinhardt, of Newton, N. C., and Ray Hastings, of Keene, N. H., at the tackles; Ted Britton, of Houston, Tex., and Bob Viner, of Washington, at the guards, with Don Bone, of Kittaning, Pa., at center. Vogts, weighing 197 pounds, is the giant of the forward wall.

Other opponents to be met after the Roosevelt game will be Woodrow Wilson High, Devitt Prep and Massanutten Military Academy, sharer of the Virginia prep school championship.

Hoyas Practice For Game With Cincinnati

While Georgetown speeded up work for Saturday's game with Cincinnati, its second of the season, in a brisk 2½-hour workout at the Hilltop, Graduate Manager of Athletics H. Gabriel Murphy continued piecing together the Hoyas' 1937 schedule, coming up with a game with Lafayette to be played at Griffith Stadium, October 19.

This is the fourth game announced for next season, and the third booked for Griffith's park. Others are with Manhattan, Maryland and Pennsylvania, the latter to be played at Franklin Field, Philadelphia.

Georgetown and Lafayette have met three times before on the gridiron, the Hoyas winning two and tying one. Their last game, played in 1927, resulted in a 27-to-2 Georgetown victory, when Mooney, Grisby, Nork, et al, wore the Blue and Gray.

Practice will be held tonight under the lights at the Stadium to give the squad a taste of playing conditions Saturday, for the Cincinnati game will be a nocturnal affair. Downfield blocking, a phase of the game in which Georgetown was ragged against Delaware, was stressed yesterday and will be featured tonight.

Detroit and Oklahoma Specialize in Upsets

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Detroit, Mich., Oct. 6.—The University of Detroit and Oklahoma A. and M., who meet here on the gridiron Friday night, are not old football enemies, but their brief series of two games has produced more upsets than most of the older rivalries. The Aggies upset Detroit in 1934, 19-6, and last year the Titans did the upsetting, winning by a 13-0 score.

Central Works On Fork Union Defense

Pearce Well Pleased After Scrimmage With Devitt on Foes' Plays.

By John R. Vosburgh.

Despite injury to two of his mainstays, Hugh Cramer, big tackle, and Felix Silverstein, elusive ball carrier, Coach Hardy Pearce, of Central High's football team, was comparatively well pleased with his club's performance yesterday after a tough scrimmage with Devitt Prep.

The scrimmage was in direct preparation for the game Friday with Fork Union Military Academy, expected to be the toughest opponent of the year for the inter-high champions. Devitt, beaten 26 to 6 last year by Fork Union, volunteered to practice with the high school and point out what kind of offense and defense it is likely to meet.

Cramer and Silverstein may not be able to see action in the game, Pearce said, and loss of this pair was the only mar on the day's workout. Cramer, who blocked the punt that led up to the winning touchdown against Washington-Lee last Friday, was clipped from the rear and received a knee injury.

Silverstein has a twisted knee and will probably be unable to play his customary relief role for Bill Ickes, starting halfback. The wiry basket ball player has gradually stamped himself as one of Pearce's finest ball carriers. If Cramer is unable to start, John Swank, another huge tackle, will probably get the call. Bill Mandis, a third 200-pounder, will be at the other tackle post.

Using Devitt's 1935 game with Fork Union as a medium of experience, Central has begun planning against a short punt formation, from which the cadets operated last year. The Virginia prep school champs displayed plenty of strength in the air as well as a glaxy of power plays from the short punt offensive.

The Central squad is aiming for this game as though it were an inter-high struggle. The boys figure if they can get past the cadets with a win they have a first-rate chance of going through the season undefeated.

English Hockey Team to Play Game Here

Washington's first international women's field hockey match will be held Saturday, at 3 p. m., when an all-English team meets an all-Washington team on the National Cathedral School field, at Thirty-fourth street and Woodley road.

Generally regarded as one of the finest teams in the world, the British combination will naturally be favored to win, but local experts have been combing Washington material seriously for months in preparation for the match. It will be the first time an all-English team has played in the Capital.

After meeting the Washington eleven, the English girls will journey into Virginia for games with Richmond, Wednesday, and Sweet Briar School, Friday. Not since 1928 has an English women's field hockey team invaded this country.

Line-up for Game.

Under the direction of Miriam L. Spaulding, of Mount Vernon Seminary, and other local leaders, the Washington squad has finally been selected for the contest. The probable line-up will run as follows:

Tourney Listed.

While the English team is touring the East, a Welsh team which arrived with the English in New York yesterday, will be playing teams in the Northeast and Midwest. On October 20, the annual conference of the International Federation of Women's Hockey Associations will be held in Philadelphia.

In addition to the United States, English and Welsh, the conference will be attended by representatives of the Scotch Irish, Union of South Africa and Australia. The English team, incidentally, will play an All-Baltimore team in Baltimore today.

In connection with the international conference, an international tournament will be played with the above-named countries competing for what will amount to the world championship. One Washington girl, Jennie Turnbull, Western High School and George Washington University graduate, is virtually certain to play on the All-American team.

"In Retrospect."

New York, Oct. 6.

Carl Hubbell, a spectral figure in white against the slate-gray background of that opening day . . . 39,000 standing at attention as the strains of the National Anthem presage the start of the 1936 World Series, and wondering what the series will bring . . . Red Ruffing, unconcerned by the fact that the great Hubbell is his pitching opponent . . . and the 39,000 aghast as the lowly-rated Jake Powell connects for the first hit off Hubbell . . . off a screwball, too, in the second inning . . . Little realizing that Powell was to be the batting star of that first game . . . Selkirk's home run puts the Yankees in a brief lead . . . Bartell's homer ties the score . . . Mancuso's single puts the Giants ahead in the sixth . . . And Ruffing and the Yanks toss the ball game away in that four-run eighth.

POVICH.

Hal Schumacher bewildered by the relentless Yankee slugging in that second game . . . Two runs in the first inning, seven more in the third . . . The Yanks ahead, 11-1 . . . Schumacher out, Smith in and out . . . Coffman in and out . . . Gabler, too . . . Gumbert stays to take his beating . . . Lazzeri's home run with the bases full back in the third . . . and Lefty Gomez holding the Giants to six hits . . . Dickey's homer with one on in that six-run ninth . . . and the Yankees splatter new slugging records all over World Series history with their 18-4 triumph . . . Joe DiMaggio racing against the centerfield fence for that unforgettable catch of Hank Leiber's 486-foot drive that ends the game . . . 45,000 remaining in their seats as the Presidential party leaves.

The third game and Freddy Fitzsimmons . . . cruel, heart-breaking and brutal defeat for old Fitz . . . turning the Yankees back with four hits, yet losing because he's too eager to knock down Crosetti's cheap hit in the eighth . . . Bump Hadley permitting the Giants to tie the score, 1-1, on Ripple's homer in the fifth . . . but getting out of a mess of trouble despite the ten hits he allows . . . Gehrig gleefully rounding the bases after breaking his hitting slump with a homer off Fitz in the second . . . Frankie Crosetti knocking down base hits all afternoon.

Hubbell back in there . . . A sure bet to even the series for the Giants . . . If he beat the Yanks with a wet ball, what would he do with a dry one . . . but a Yankee run in the second inning is not his fault . . . Jackson's wild throw set the stage . . . Three Yankee runs in the next is Hubbell's fault, though . . . Crosetti doubling to right and Rolfe singling to center . . . and Lou Gehrig getting even with Hub with that booming home run to right . . . 4-0 in favor of the Yanks and Monte Pearson in there turning back the Giants . . . They score two runs for Hub, but no more . . . Pearson actually outpitching Hubbell, lame back and all . . . and covering first base on Bartell's grounder to Lazzeri with two men on in the eighth, to save the game for himself . . . Hubbell watching the finish from the bench . . . As the Yanks score their last run off Gabler.

Terry and the Giants gambling on Schumacher in that fifth game . . . and winning when defeat would put them out of the series . . . three runs off Ruffing in the first inning . . . It's a new Giant team . . . but Schumacher is in trouble . . . frequently . . . Jackson's wild throw, Lazzeri's single wipe out his 4-2 lead in the sixth . . . A tie game now . . . Ruffing and his sore arm quit the game in the seventh . . . Big Pat Malone pitching and allowing not a hit for three innings . . . but Schumacher making Dickey pop up with two on in the seventh . . . and getting Gehrig with two on in the eighth . . . Bill Terry driving in the winning run with his fly to Di Maggio in the tenth . . . after Moore doubles to left . . . and Schumacher saving the Giants in the tenth after Dickey singles.

Back to the Polo Grounds for that sixth game . . . Scalpers stuck with costly tickets as New York becomes slightly weary of this World Series . . . Let it end and what of it . . . but the Giants are still fighting . . . Admire that . . . Old Fitz gets his ears pinned back this time . . . he can't make it . . . Those Yankees can hit . . . Yes, it's true what they say about those Yanks . . . Just a breeze . . . The Giants never had a chance . . . Shoulda known that.

Gevinson Heads Amateur Ring Card

With Lou Gevinson scheduled to make one of his last appearances as an amateur when he meets Chief Little Wolf, of the U. S. S. Indianapolis, five members of the National Guard boxing team will travel to Norfolk again Friday to meet a team of sailors at the Ocean View Athletic Club. The local soldiers' last start in the Norfolk suburb, two weeks ago, netted them two wins and a draw.

The bouts will act as a tune-up for the boxers, who will participate in the farewell show for Gevinson, scheduled for Turner's Arena two weeks from today. While undecided as to the date of his debut, the local amateur sensation plans to join the pro ranks before November.

Bob Mathias, welterweight, victorious in his last two bouts, and Roy Crombie, lightweight, will seek their second victims in the Ocean View ring.

Furr Faces Lucas In Match Monday

Phil Furr, welterweight champion of the District, has been accorded the honor of opening the indoor boxing season here Monday night, with Johnny Lucas, scrappy Camden, N. J., fighter, as the other half of the main card at Joe Turner's Arena.

According to such information as has reached this locality concerning Mr. Lucas, the New Jersey boy should rate a slight choice to slap our Mr. Furr down. This is on the basis of past performances.

Records of the Lucas past which have reached local Promoter Goldie Ahearn show that two fisticuffmen who thumped Mr. Furr for a loss were in turn defeated by Johnny Lucas, of Camden, N. J. Thus, following the law of logic, the Camden cannonader should win over Furr.

The latter's shandlers, however, are not following this logic for they were very anxious to get the fight just to show how much their young hopeful has simproved. The two victims of Lucas are named Johnny Gacdick and Jimmy Leto, whom some ring followers may remember as conuerors of Furr. Eddie Cooch and Gehun Alvarez are other victims of the Lucas lightning.

Figures Show Fall Upswing Is Under Way

Comparisons With Last Year Reveal Sharp Advances.

New York, Oct. 6.—Comparisons with a year ago reveal advances of 52 per cent in steel output, 167 per cent in automobile production, 17.2 per cent in electric power output, 11.1 per cent in commercial loans, and 9.6 per cent in carloadings. In issuing these figures, Poor's Investment Advisory Service points out that the customary fall upswing is well under way.

"Current evidence points to a continuation of retail trade at levels well above the corresponding 1935 level," says the report. "More outstanding, however, is the strengthening of heavy industry. Featured at the moment is steel, since the present operating rate of 74 per cent of capacity marks a new high since February, 1930. Present operating schedules compare with 48.9 per cent of capacity at this time last year and only 24.2 per cent in the corresponding week of 1934. To a degree the step-up in operations reflects increased buying of steel sheets by automobile makers, some of whom have entered the market for new 1937 models. Of more significance, however, is the larger business being received from builders and railroads.

Steel Seen at 90 Per Cent.

"With the automotive, the construction and the railroad industries making more liberal purchases and expected to accelerate their buying pace during the next few weeks, it is the opinion in trade circles that October will witness a steel operating ratio of at least 90 per cent.

"Equally impressive as the vitality shown by the steel business is the spurt of carloadings to 775,000, approximately 10,000 cars over the previous 1936 peak recorded in the week ended September 5, and with one exception the highest total for any week since 1930. Based upon seasonal consideration, the logical expectation is that improving general business activity in the next month will carry loadings above 800,000."

$50,000,000 Bills 3.5 Times Subscribed

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau announces that the tenders for $50,000,000, or thereabouts, of 273-day Treasury bills, dated October 7, 1936, and maturing July 7, 1937, which were offered on October 2, have been opened at the Federal Reserve Banks.

The total amount applied for was $175,240,000, of which $50,045,000 was accepted. Except for one bid of $5,000, the accepted bids ranged in price from 99.886, equivalent to a rate of about 0.150 per cent per annum, to 99.873, equivalent to a rate of about 0.167 per cent per annum, on a bank discount basis.

Weekly Wages Buy More Now Than in 1929

Earnings Have Increased More Rapidly Than Living Costs.

New York, Oct. 6.—Purchasing power of average weekly earnings of wage-earners employed in manufacturing industries is higher today than in the boom year, 1929, while average weekly working hours are shorter. These facts are brought out in an analysis of manufacturing statistics made public today by the National Industrial Conference Board.

The current higher purchasing power of wages is accounted for chiefly by the fact that weekly money earnings have advanced more rapidly then the cost of living.

For the first six months of 1936 the average cost of living index, taking the average for 1929 as 100, was 83.7, and the index of average weekly money earnings was 86.7. This gave an index of "real" earnings of 103.6, or 3.6 above the 1929 level.

Average hours worked per week in the first six months of 1936 were 38.4, as compared with 48.3 in 1929.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Continue Upward Trend Despite Profit-Taking; Sterling Is Lower.

New York, Oct. 6.—In trading that again exceeded 2,000,000 shares, the stock market advanced further, but average prices did not reach a new high level for the year. Numerous issues nevertheless sold at their best prices for the year or longer. The number of issues dealt in was the largest in several months. Government bonds were soft, but speculative issues hardened. December wheat rose half a cent at 114¼ cents a bushel.

Strength was well distributed among the stock groups. The sharpest gains were made by representatives of half a dozen divisions. Farm implements were buoyant as the passage of time adds to the opinion that total production this year will be a good deal greater on the farms than the pessimists supposed during the drought and on the certainty of continued doles and benefits. Deere was the bright performer, rising more than 5 points and others advanced 2 to 3 points.

Another line of farm activity was represented in the buying of mail-order shares. Montgomery Ward and Sears were the leaders. Metal shares were active enough to keep interest in inflation in the foreground. Silvers were firm. American Smelting was a favorite and was bid up 2 points on the promise of a higher dividend.

Oils Turn Active.

Steel shares were firm, but enough profit taking appeared among them, and in the motors as well, to check buoyancy. Electric manufacturers again were strong. Oils were more active than usual. A few of them, including Socony and Barnsdall, opened on large blocks. Among the individual favorites were the International Paper issues, Celanese, Rolling Mills, Bendix, Reliable Stores, Interlake Iron, American Radiator, Canada Dry and Industrial Rayon.

Fairbanks Morse preferred sold at 200 on a jump of 21 points. The stocks is convertible into three shares of common, currently quoted around 68. Melville Shoe advanced more than 3 points to a new high price on the lifting of the dividend. Timken Roller was a good stock. Fertilizer issues were taken in sympathy with mail orders and farm implements. Utilities were kept in the background, although Consolidated Edison was active. Dome Mines hung back among the golds, in spite of the higher London price for the metal.

Sterling Declines.

Foreign exchanges followed their natural bent, following the all round devaluation, and if the British, French and American support funds were active their cue was to let sterling down easily and to give francs and guilders a firm tone. It may be that the French and Dutch currency now has gone down about as far as present conditions warrant, but the widespread belief that Great Britain is unlikely to go into any stabilization agreement that would leave the pound at a higher value in dollar terms than it formerly had when on the gold standard, suggests a further drop in the pound. No change was reported in lira quotations. Sterling was held around $4.91.

Price Control Experiments.

For the next few months the world will be able to watch interesting experiments in price control. France is grappling with the problem and has been for some time. One reason for long opposition to devaluation of the franc was the protest of the Socialists that it would mean higher prices, which would be a tax on the poor. Since the government instituted its easy money and price lifting policy of last spring, prices have risen sharply, in anticipation of the inevitable currency devaluation. It is now proposed to hold in check further increases in living costs, but the task will be a difficult one, especially since the heavy deficits now being run by the government mean inflation, the natural lifter of prices in a country of low production.

As a counter measure to the inflationary effect of the government's policy and of currency devaluation, the government in France is preparing to lower tariff and import quotas. That is bound to have some effect in keeping down prices, but it probably won't please the French manufacturer, who was the chief supporter of devaluation, nor the French farmer.

Italy is facing even harder problems. No one knows just how high the public debt is, since no figures have been published in over a year, nor how much gold the Bank of Italy holds.

Test Is Coming.

However, it is certain the public debt is enormous enough to warrant extremely heavy taxes, or inflation, or both. Already a heavy tax has been laid on business in the form of a forced loan, following devaluation. Both high taxation and inflation spell higher commodity prices, and that is why the Italian government is strenuously asserting its intention and ability to keep down living costs. The real test of an economic dictator's power is about to be provided.

Foreign experience calls to mind the magnificent pretensions of our own Government three years ago to inflate prices as an aid to the poor, and the subsequent success of huge Government spending, currency appreciation and restriction on production in lifting the cost of living. Our own experiment would have been even more successful in promoting an inflationary boom were it not for the large surpluses of commodities on hand at the beginning, the enormous surplus production capacity, and the proverbial slowness of a nation to take alarm over the course of economic policies before the pinch of taxation and living costs are actually felt.

The public, in a manner, has been drugged. Postponement of taxation, on the one hand, and direct relief, doles and benefits on the other, have temporarily retarded the march toward inflation in this country, but all that is greatly increasing the chances for inflation in the long run.

Banking Position.

The figures for reporting member banks in 101 leading cities as of September 30 are heavily weighted with the changes which were reported last week by reporting banks in New York and Chicago. They emphasize the fact that the expansion of commercial and miscellaneous loans continues. The increase was $70,000,000 for the week, making the gain since a year ago $569,000,000. Since February 26 of this year the increase has been $666,000,000, which is no mean rise for so short a period. Of the week's increase $51,000,000 was the expansion here and $9,000,000 was Chicago's share.

Standard Gas Holders Seek $100,000,000

Management Is Charged With Manipulation in Stocks.

By the United Press.

Philadelphia, Oct. 6.—Stockholders of the Standard Gas & Electric Co., sought permission in United States Circuit Court of Appeals today to file suit to recover between $80,000,000 and $110,000,000 from former executives of the corporation. Simon H. Rifkind, New York, attorney for the Delevan Corporation and other stockholders, charged that officers and directors of the huge corporation had despoiled the company of millions of dollars through stock manipulations.

Judge Warren Davis reserved decision on the petition until the court is advised of the results of an investigation ordered by Federal Judge John P. Nields of the Wilmington, Del., district. A petition similar to Rifkind's was presented to Judge Nields last May.

Rifkind contended that executives of the corporation obtained the money illegally from the purchase of utility companies throughout the country and by a series of stock transactions.

Wagner's Partner Attorney.

The attorney, law partner of United States Senator Robert F. Wagner, of New York, said other companies were bought through H. M. Byllesby & Co., controlled, according to Rifkind, by Standard. Rifkind said that in 1926 the Byllesby concern profited by more than $5,000,000 in a stock transaction in which they invested only $500.

Standard Gas & Electric now is seeking to reorganize its $400,000,000 capital structure, including utilities in 21 States and 1 foreign country, in the Wilmington Federal Court district. Judge Davis said today that he did not "see how any plan of reorganization can be consummated or even proposed, while these changes remain undecided."

2,000 Are Present At Rites for Straus

New York, Oct. 6 (AP).—Two thousand mourners, including Mrs. Roosevelt, the Governor of New York and the Ambassador from France, filled Temple Emanu-el this morning for the brief and impressive funeral service for Jesse Isador Straus, former American Ambassador to France, who died at his Park avenue home Sunday.

Thousands of floral tributes from the late merchant's friends in both America and Europe banked the temple.

Among those who attended the services besides Mrs. Roosevelt, Gov. Lehman and Ambassador Andre de Laboulaye, were Mayor La Guardia, Senator Robert F. Wagner, of New York, and many persons who were former employes of Mr. Straus when he headed R. H. Macy & Co. Many of the latter had known the late Ambassador when he was a bank clerk.

Suit Challenges County Police Court Legality

System in Prince Georges Would Be Revised if Motion Is Granted.

Alleging unconstitutionality of both the Prince Georges County Police Department and Court, a motion to quash a reckless driving conviction obtained in the county police court last July was filed yesterday in circuit court of Upper Marlboro by Attorneys Louis Lebowitz and Robert W. McCullough.

If the motion is granted a complete revisal of the policing system in Prince Georges County will be necessary.

The legislative act of 1927 setting up the present police court system and the act of 1931 establishing the present police department set-up would be automatically suspended.

Lebowitz and McCullough base their charges of unconstitutionality on these acts.

According to the State constitution, it is alleged, the county commissioners are directed to appoint "constables" for the election districts. The police department act of 1931, the information states, makes no mention of election districts, merely stating that 15 constables shall be appointed by the commissioners.

The act of 1927, establishing the police court system, is unconstitutional, the motion alleges, because it deprives the justices of the peace of the authority to try traffic cases, a power which, it is contended, is delegated to them by the State constitution.

The act of 1927 placed the authority to try traffic cases in the hands of one magistrate, designated as justice of the peace at large.

Young Inventor Claims Answer Of 3-Dimensional Film Secret

Plain Window Screen Gives Depth to Cinema Images in Test Showing; Industry Has Long Sought Cheap Method.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

P. Serge Litt, a blond young inventor from Tonawanda, N. Y., announced last night that by placing a couple of layers of ordinary window wire screen in front of a metal reflector he has solved the problem of giving moving pictures depth as well as heignt and breadth.

The goal of three-dimensional movies has intrigued the industry for many years. One large producing company owns patents on a successful process, but which is so costly that so far it has been used only as a novelty.

Litt's invention embodies an entirely different principle and he will demonstrate it in Rochester, N. Y., next week before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

The young inventor demonstrated his new screen yesterday to the United Press, using a home movie projector and flashing the pictures first on his three-dimension screen and then on the ordinary flat motion-picture screen.

On Litt's screen the highlights sprang into prominence and the shadows faded away into the background. The effect was like the old-fashioned stereoscope views popular in American parlors a generation ago, which were viewed through a special frame containing lenses for each eye.

Litt's invention is really two screens, one in front of the other. The image first strikes a wire screen which breaks it up into 16 small squares to the square inch. Just behind this screen is another, chemically coated to correct distortion caused by the first screen. A quarter-inch behind the second screen is the metal reflector.

Thus, part of the image is reflected from the chemically treated screen and part from the metal reflector, and the quarter-inch space is sufficient to give the illusion of great depth.

The new screen, Litt estimates, will cost approximately $1.50 per square foot to manufacture, compared with an average cost of $1.37 per square foot for the screens now in use in motion picture theaters.
